them, and gave them into the hand of their enemies; so fell they all by the sword.
24 According to their uncleanness and according to their transgressions have I done unto them, and hid my face from them.
25 Therefore thus saith the Lord God: Now will I bring again the captivity of Jacob, and have mercy upon the whole house of Israel, and will be jealous for my holy name;
26 After that they have borne their shame, and all their trespasses whereby they have trespassed against me, when they dwelt safely in their land, and none made them afraid.
27 When I have brought them again from the people, and gathered them out of their enemies' lands, and am sanctified in them in the sight of many nations;
28 Then shall they know that I am the Lord their God, which caused them to be led into captivity among the heathen: but I have gathered them unto their own land, and have left none of them any more there.
29 Neither will I hide my face any more from them: for I have poured out my Spirit upon the house of Israel, saith the Lord God.
30 In the fifth and twentieth year of our captivity, in the beginning of the year, in the tenth day of the month, in the

40 In the twenty-fifth year of our exile, at the beginning of the year, on the

8. RESTORATION OF THE FORTUNES OF JACOB (39:25-29)

25. The whole house of Israel: Israel and Judah. For restore the fortunes see 16:55; 29:14. Note that this is really the doctrine of “for his name’s sake.”
26. Translate “They shall bear their shame” (cf. KJV) as in the M.T. rather than They shall forget their shame, which reads the letter shin for sin. With vs. 26b cf. 34:28.
29. Cl. 37:14.

IV. VISION OF THE RESTORED COMMUNITY (40:1-48:55)

These nine chapters comprise the final section of the book of Ezekiel, related to chs. 33-39, and yet standing apart as a distinct unit because of their concern with the whether it is possible for a nation as such to renounce power. He answers that this could take place only were a nation found willing to die as state and be reborn as church, i.e., “only if in an unexpected historical moment it is seized as a whole by the transcendental idea and for its sake renounces power.” He goes on to say, “Such an event would be one of the great turning points of history: it would perhaps create mankind.”

Or we may quote from a book written at the time of the Versailles Treaty: “The preceding all mean war; only the great departure from all precedents can in the long run mean peace.”

* 40:1-43:27. The Vision of the Temple.—On the vexed question of the composition of chs. 40-48 see the Exeg. It will be assumed here that the groundwork of these final chapters is from a disciple of Ezekiel who lived in the Exile and fourteenth year after that the city was smitten, in the selfsame day the hand of the LORD was upon me, and brought me thither.

282

tenth day of the month, in the fourteenth year after the city was conquered, on that very day, the hand of the LORD was upon temple and its ritual. The passage 40:1-42:20 describes the detail of the arrangements of the temple area as witnessed by Ezekiel in a vision in which the divine architect acts as guide. The section 43:1-5 depicts the return of the glory of Yahweh, while in 43:6-7 Yahweh speaks from the inner sanctuary and gives instructions for the making of the altar and its consecration. Ch. 44 is concerned with the proper ministry in the sanctuary, granting full priestly rights only to the priests of the family of Zadok, with the Levites as temple servants and foreigners proscribed from such service. The description of the allotment of the land begins in 45:1-9, anticipating the more detailed account in 47:13-48:35. In 45:10-46:18 there are regulations for weights and measures, the contributions of the princes, the sacrifices at the stated feasts and the new moon and sabbaths, etc. In 46:19-24 the survey of the temple area continues; this is concluded with the vesture of the sacred stream flowing from the temple in 47:1-12. For a general analysis of the authorship of this section see the Intro., pp. 53-56, and Excg. below.

A. THE TEMPLE ARRANGEMENTS: OUTER AND INNER COURTS (40:1-49)

The prophet is transported to the temple mount from Babylon, and a heavenly guide conducts him on a tour from point to point in the temple area, measuring off the various gates, walls, and chambers of the courts. The tour begins at the eastern gate and leads eventually into the inner court. The chapter ends with the beginning of the description of the temple itself, which is continued in ch. 41.

1. EZEKIEL AT THE TEMPLE MOUNT (40:1-5)

The date is April 17, 572 (April 28, 573), and the transport parallels that in ch. 8, which was also "in visions of God" (see Excg. on 8:3, 11:22-23), but which may reflect an actual visit. Here we have no real vision, but rather the literary form of a vision, as was confident that his people would soon be restored to their land. It is clear that the whole section is not from one hand, that there is a good deal of patchwork about it. But we shall be content to speak of "the seer" when the author of any part is referred to.

We need not doubt that the kernel of the section is a transcript of an actual vision on the part of the seer, which can be dated in 573, in accordance with 40:14. Of course the various details, the measurements, etc., were worked out subsequently. But the symmetry and general pattern of the sanctuary will belong to the original experience. Fresh and living at the first, it was reduced to mathematical precision in the act of committing it to writing. This draft was then amplified by various later hands, who may be held responsible in particular for the various scraps of legislation which lie scattered about chs. 40-48. Here we have something like a blueprint for reconstruction. Thus, while ch. 40 begins with a tour of the temple under angelic guidance, ch. 43 ends with elaborate ritual prescriptions.

Again, the vision will probably draw upon the seer's recollections of Solomon's temple from the days when it still stood. Memories blend with hopes and create a condition of trance in which what was active in his waking moments now takes shape before him in symbolic forms.

The seer, we may suppose, has been brooding over the possibility of a fresh beginning in the life of his people. Convinced as he is that return to Palestine will come in God's time, his heart is set on something much more important than even that. He wants the severed bond between God and Israel to be restored. The divine presence forsakes the land because of sin (11:23); what hope is there that it will return? If it returns, it will do so when the appointed hour comes, since God's majesty is not for us to command. Yet Israel need not remain passive; let the people make themselves ready in purity and dedication for what the future will bring.

We must not think of the seer as interested only in the temple as a ritualist and accostalists of the most narrow sort. We should give his vision a more generous interpretation. The temple which he sees symbolizes for him a state of things in which the whole life of the restored community is dedicated to the Lord. As we read
2 In the visions of God brought he me into the land of Israel, and set me upon a very high mountain, by which was the frame of a city on the south.

3 And he brought me thither, and, behold, there was a man, whose appearance was like the appearance of brass, with a line of flax in his hand, and a measuring reed: and he stood in the gate.

4 And the man said unto me, Son of man, behold, with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears, and set thine heart upon all that I shall show thee; for to the intent that I might show them unto thee art thou brought hither: declare all that thou seest to the house of Israel.

also probably in Zechariah. The phrase at the beginning of the year (vs. 1) should probably be read "in the first month" (יוֹם הָאָדֶן) as in the LXX and to accord with the usual formula. The tenth day of the month may be after the analogy of the tenth day of the seventh month, the day of Atonement, apparently considered a New Year's Day in Lev. 25:9 (see Julian Morgenstern, "The Three Calendars of Ancient Israel," and "Supplementary Studies in the Calendars of Ancient Israel," Hebrew Union College Annual, I [1924], 22-28; X [1935], 8, 29). According to the P source, the tenth day of the first month was the day the Hebrews entered the Promised Land (Josh. 5:19; for another association see Exod. 12:2). The author is using the symbolism of the New Year's Day, for on this day the glory of Yahweh fills the tent of meeting at its erection and dedication on the first day of the first month.

40:2. The very high mountain is Mount Zion, as in Ps. 48:2; Isa. 2:2; Mic. 4:1; Zech. 14:10, considered elevated beyond actual height to suggest its significance. Actually the Mount of Olives towers above the sacred area by about three hundred feet. Opposite me: Read תֹּֽאַבָּם with the LXX for the less probable יָדָם, on the south. The sacred area with its gates, walls, and buildings resembled a city plan.

3. This may be the architect of the heavenly courts (see Zech. 2:1-2; cf. the divine scribe in Ezek. 9:1-11). His appearance like bronze indicates his supernatural character (cf. 1:4, 7, 27; Dan. 10:6). Cf. the imagery in Rev. 21:14-27, where the transport to the high mountain, the angel with the measuring rod, and the measuring of the city of Jerusalem are influenced by this passage.

through these final chapters we are struck by the fact that the temple stands empty, waiting for the divine presence to enter and hallow it again. When God returns everything falls into its place, the purpose of the great construction is realized, and the new name of the city reveals its character: "The Lord is there." (48:15).

40:4. He Came to a City—J. B. Priezle's play They Came to a City gives expression to the widespread desire in our time for a more satisfying form of community life, one in which artificial distinctions will be abolished, honest work will be prized, and man will serve his fellow man in freedom and joy. Our age wants a city in which the life of his people will be renewed; in his vision such a city spreads out before his eyes. It is all blurred and obscure at first, but as it takes on clearer outline he sees that it is rather a temple than a city. Is he disappointed? No, for he is well aware that a city is made not only by the materials of which it is composed, but even more by the spiritual values which it cherishes. It is not merely that our modern town planning does not often give due place to the needs of a new area for worship. Something more than church buildings is involved. Can we really hope for a worthier and healthier common life unless it gathers around reverence for all that is high and holy?
5 And behold, a wall on the outside of the house round about, and in the man’s hand a measuring reed of six cubits long by the cubit and a handbreadth; so he measured the breadth of the building, one reed; and the height, one reed.

6 Then came he unto the gate which looketh toward the east, and went up the stairs thereof, and measured the threshold of the gate, which was one reed broad.

7 And every little chamber was one reed long, and one reed broad; and between the little chambers were five cubits; and the threshold of the gate by the porch of the gate within was one reed.

5. The reed six cubits long would have measured about ten feet four inches, the long cubit being 20.679 inches, while the shorter or more ordinary cubit was about 17½ inches (see Galling, Biblisches Realklexikon, p. 367). The equal height and thickness of the wall surrounding the temple area are probably not without significance, as also the fact that the temple area and the inner court formed perfect squares. The great thickness of the wall is in part to emphasize the separation between the secular and the sacred (cf. 42:20).

2. The East Gate of the Outer Court (40:6-16)

For something of the significance of this gate in the ritual of the temple, see Morgenstern, “The Gates of Righteousness,” pp. 1-57. The general plan of the gate has significant parallels in excavated city gates, especially the Solomonic period gate at Megiddo, with three recessed chambers on each side of the passageway (see Loud, Megiddo II, Vol. I, Pl. 6; Vol. II, p. 48, Fig. 105; an important discussion of the east gate is that by Howie, Date and Composition of Ezekiel, pp. 43-46, and “The East Gate of Ezekiel’s Temple Enclosure and the Solomonic Gateway of Megiddo,” Bulletin of the American Schools of Oriental Research, No. 117 [Feb., 1950], pp 15-19).

6. There were seven steps to the two other gates of the outer court (see vs. 22, 26), indicating that the whole temple area was on a terrace or platform. The LXX has seven steps for this east gate also, and this may be original. The gate has two thresholds, this one at the entrance corresponding to the thickness of the wall around the area. The second threshold, before the entrance into the vestibule of the gate, is mentioned in vs. 7. And one threshold, one reed deep (RSV mg.): is here obviously scribal dittoography (note the “keepers of the threshold” in II Kings 12:9; 22:4; II Chr. 34:9; Jer. 55:4; etc.).

7. Crossing the threshold at the entrance of the gate, one went along the passageway with the three guardrooms or recessed chambers on either side, and then came to the

5. The Divine Standard.—The see’s guide, who is to initiate him into the plan of the temple, has a yardstick of uncommon length. In more than one country of the ancient East there were two measures, the longer of which went by the name of “royal.” So the guide brings to the work a divine standard. The new community is to base its life from the very beginning on God’s will. It is not sufficient that it should build part of the temple to its own specifications and leave him to crown it; the work must be begun, continued, and finished under his direction. The trouble with us often is that we bring God in only when the work is finished and we find it going not so well as we had expected; his job is to put everything right for us! Why not bring him in as architect at the very outset of the enterprise?

40:5-42:20. The Plan of Life.—The plan to which the temple is rebuilt will symbolize those 8 He measured also the porch of the gate within one reed.
9 Then measured he the porch of the gate, eight cubits; and the posts thereof, two cubits; and the porch of the gate was inward.
10 And the little chambers of the gate eastward were three on this side, and three on that side: they three were of one measure: and the posts had one measure on this side and on that side.
11 And he measured the breadth of the entry of the gate, ten cubits; and the length of the gate, thirteen cubits.
12 The space also before the little chambers was one cubit on this side, and the space was one cubit on that side: and the little chambers were six cubits on this side, and six cubits on that side.
13 He measured then the gate from the roof of one little chamber to the roof of another: the breadth was five and twenty cubits, door against door.

*Then he measured the vestibule of the gateway, eight cubits: and its jambs, two cubits; and the vestibule of the gate was at the inner end. 10 And there were three side rooms on either side of the east gate: the three were of the same size; and the jambs on either side were of the same size. 11 Then he measured the breadth of the opening of the gateway, ten cubits; and the breadth of the gateway, thirteen cubits. 12 There was a barrier before the side rooms, one cubit on either side; and the side rooms were six cubits on either side. 13 Then he measured the gate from the back of the one side room to the back of the other, a breadth of five threshold which led into the vestibule of the gate. From the vestibule one stepped into the outer court. Howie (op. cit., p. 111) believes there was no vestibule at the inner end and leaves the meaning of vs. 7b obscure, omitting as ditography a reference to it in vs. 9b.

Compare Ge: Heb roof

8-10. The ditography in vs. 8 is obvious: the eight cubits are the depth of the vestibule, its breadth being given in the emended text of vs. 14 as twenty cubits. The jambs belong to the opening of the vestibule into the court, the opening itself measuring ten cubits from jamb to jamb (vs. 11).

11-12. The breadth of the gateway, not its length (contrast KJV), was thirteen cubits; we should perhaps read וְיִפְתַּח, "passageway," for הַמְלֶטֶת, length. If so, this is the distance from the jambs of the side chambers on one side to the jambs of the side chambers on the opposite side; then the side chambers must have projected beyond their jambs, the projection possibly being the יִטְהֵר or barrier of vs. 12. This יִטְהֵר has been variously interpreted: the reference may be to the raised pavement of the side chambers, one cubit high, that pavement in the first pair of side chambers being narrower than in the others, set back one and one half cubits to permit space for the door sockets and for the door of the gate to swing back; the passageway at this point would thus be wider than through the rest of the gate, the thirteen cubits of vs. 11 (see Gallig in Berthelet and Gallig, Henckel, pp. 136-39). Howie takes the thirteen cubits as the measurements of the breadth of the inner vestibule, adjoining an outer vestibule; in this case we should read יִפְתַּח, breadth (cf. 1XX, יִפְתַּח יָדָה). 13. The over-all width of the gate was twenty-five cubits, and its length, given in vs. 15, fifty cubits. The Hebrew יִפְתַּח, roof, is difficult to understand, and we should perhaps emend to יִפְתַּח, back; the LXX reads τὸν τοῦ γονίου, "wall." The doors at the back of each side chamber would open on the pavement of the outer court.

features which the seer most desires to see in the life of the restored community. There are three points which particularly call for attention.

(a) Holiness. The whole structure of the temple is intended to impress upon those who worship there that they are a holy people, that they belong to God. This is brought about in two ways. First, by separation. Special rooms are provided in which to lay up the most holy things, and the priests are required to change their clothing when they go out among the.

286
14 He made also posts of threescore cubits, even unto the post of the court round about the gate.
15 And from the face of the gate of the entrance unto the face of the porch of the inner gate were fifty cubits.
16 And there were narrow windows to the little chambers, and to their posts within the gate round about, and likewise to the arches; and windows were round about inward: and upon each post were palm trees.
17 Then brought he me into the outward court, and, lo, there were chambers, and a pavement made for the court round about: thirty chambers were upon the pavement.
18 And the pavement by the side of the gates over against the length of the gates was the lower pavement.
19 Then he measured the breadth from the forefront of the lower gate unto the forefront of the inner court without, a hundred cubits eastward and northward.
20 ¶ And the gate of the outward court that looked toward the north, he measured the length thereof, and the breadth thereof.

and twenty cubits, from door to door. ¶ He measured also the vestibule, twenty cubits; and round about the vestibule of the gateway was the court. ¶ From the front of the gate at the entrance to the end of the inner vestibule of the gate was fifty cubits. And the gateway had windows round about, narrowing inward into their jams in the side rooms, and likewise the vestibule had windows round about inside, and on the jams were palm trees.

17 Then he brought me into the outer court; and behold, there were chambers and a pavement, round about the court; thirty chambers fronted on the pavement. And the pavement ran along the side of the gates, corresponding to the length of the gates; this was the lower pavement. ¶ Then he measured the distance from the inner front of the lower gate to the outer front of the inner court, a hundred cubits.
20 ¶ Then he went before me to the north, and behold, there was a gate which faced toward the north, belonging to the outer court. He measured its length and its

14. The verse is hopelessly corrupt. The emended text of the RSV, based partly on the LXX, at least makes sense and provides a missing measurement. Howie finds here the over-all measurements of the outer gate (outer vestibule) twenty cubits wide.
16. See 1 Kings 6:4 where ἐπὶ τῶν παραθύρων may best be translated “windows with recessed frames”; the text here refers to the same kind of windows, παραθύρων, windows . . . narrowing inwards, which are illustrated on ivory plaques found in excavations and called in the Talmud “Tyrann windows.” The palm tree decoration, noted also on Solomon’s temple, was a common decorative motif in the Near East (see G. Ernest Wright, “Solomon’s Temple Reconstructed,” Biblical Archaeologist, IV [1941], 26-27).

5. The Thirty Chambers Around the Court (40:17-19)
17-19. The size or disposition of the thirty chambers is not given. They would have been for the use of the people and the Levites who worshiped in the outer court. The pavement around the outer court extended the length of the gate from the walls, i.e., fifty cubits. It is called the lower pavement as over against the pavement in the inner court, which was at a higher level (cf. II Chr. 7:5). So also the gates of the outer court were the “lower” gates. The outer court was a hundred cubits deep, measuring from the inner face of the gates of the outer court to the outer face of the gates of the inner court (cf. vs. 23, 27). In vs. 19 some read “gate” for court with the LXX, although the latter is understandable.

4. The North and South Gates of the Outer Court (40:20-27)
These measurements accord with those of the east gate. The Qere הָעָבִיד, “its vestibules,” in vs. 21, 22, 24-26 might be taken to support the idea of two vestibules (cf. also vs. 29 ff.).

287
21 And the little chambers thereof were three on this side and three on that side; and the posts thereof and the arches thereof were after the measure of the first gate: the length thereof was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits.

22 And their windows, and their arches, and their palm trees, were after the measure of the gate that looketh toward the east; and they went up unto it by seven steps; and the arches thereof were before them.

23 And the gate of the inner court was over against the gate toward the north, and toward the east; and he measured from gate to gate a hundred cubits.

24 ¶ After that he brought me toward the south, and behold a gate toward the south: and he measured the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, according to these measures.

25 And there were windows in it and in the arches thereof round about, like those windows: the length was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits.

26 And there were seven steps to go up to it, and the arches thereof were before them: and it had palm trees, one on this side, and another on that side, upon the posts thereof.

27 And there was a gate in the inner court toward the south: and he measured from gate to gate toward the south a hundred cubits.

28 And he brought me to the inner court by the south gate: and he measured the south gate according to these measures;

29 And the little chambers thereof, and the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, according to these measures: and there were windows in it and in the arches thereof round about: it was fifty cubits long, and five and twenty cubits broad.

30 And the arches round about were five and twenty cubits long, and five cubits broad.

28. The words דּוֹרִיתָהוּ הָעֶשֶׁר, eastward and northward, are meaningless, and the RSV reads דִּוָּרֵיתָהוּ הָעֶשֶׁר, be went before me to the north; cf. the LXX καὶ ἐκλείψανεν με, "and he brought me" (ἐξελέώσαντος με). Instead of and the gate read and behold, there was a gate.

5. The Three Gates of the Inner Court (40:28-37)

28-37. These gates correspond in position and arrangements with those of the outer court, save that they were reached by eight steps instead of seven, and the vestibule, facing the outer court, was at the opposite end. V. 30 is meaningless in the context and is 31 And the arches thereof were toward the outer court; and palm trees were upon the posts thereof: and the going up to it had eight steps.

32 ¶ And he brought me into the inner court toward the east: and he measured the gate according to these measures.

33 And the little chambers thereof, and the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, were according to these measures: and there were windows therein and in the arches thereof round about: it was fifty cubits long, and five and twenty cubits broad.

34 And the arches thereof were toward the outward court; and palm trees were upon the posts thereof, on this side, and on that side: and the going up to it had eight steps.

35 ¶ And he brought me to the north gate, and measured it according to these measures:

36 The little chambers thereof, the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, and the windows to it round about: the length was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits.

37 And the posts thereof were toward the outer court; and palm trees were upon the posts thereof, on this side, and on that side: and the going up to it had eight steps.

38 And the chambers and the entries thereof were by the posts of the gate, where they washed the burnt offering;

39 ¶ And in the porch of the gate were two tables on this side, and two tables on that side, to slay thereon the burnt offering and the sin offering and the trespass offering.

omitted by several Hebrew MSS and the LXX; it may be due to ditography. Vs. 56 originally read as vs. 29, 53 (see RSV mg.). In vs. 57 read Its vestibule as in vs. 51, 54 for "its jambs" (cf. KJV) with the LXX and Vulg.; i.e., ἐξώθων for ἐξώθω.

6. SACRIFICE AT THE NORTH OR EAST GATE OF THE INNER COURT (40:38-43)

38-43. The text does not clearly identify the gate. The position of the altar and the description of the practice in 40:1-2 suggest the east gate (so Cornill, Galling, Cooke, et al.), but the north gate has just been described and there is a possible allusion to it in vs. 40, although vs. 40a is corrupt and obscure. The editor’s prince uses the east people. Second, by graduation. The worshiper must go up from the outer court to the inner, while the central shrine again is elevated even above that. No one could worship in such a building without receiving the vivid impression of something beyond the human which is to be approached with awe and reverence. Each step a man takes brings him nearer to the central mystery. In this respect the seer’s vision departs considerably from the ground plan of Solomon’s temple, so that we can be sure he is expressing something to which he attaches the utmost
40. And at the side without, as one goeth up to the entry of the north gate, were two tables; and on the other side, which was at the porch of the gate, were two tables.
41. Four tables were on this side, and four tables on that side, by the side of the gate; eight tables, whereupon they slew their sacrifices.
42. And the four tables were of hewn stone for the burnt offering, of a cubit and a half long, and a cubit and a half broad, and one cubit high; whereupon also they laid the instruments wherein they slew the burnt offering and the sacrifice.
43. And within were hooks, a hand breadth, fastened round about; and upon the tables was the flesh of the offering.
44. ¶ And without the inner gate were the chambers of the singers in the inner court, which was at the side of the north gate; and their prospect was toward the south; one at the side of the east gate having the prospect toward the north.
45. And he said unto me, This chamber, whose prospect is toward the south, is for the priests, the keepers of the charge of the house.
46. And the chamber whose prospect is toward the north is for the priests, the keepers of the charge of the altar: these are the sons of Zadok among the sons of Levi, which come near to the Lord to minister unto him.
47. So he measured the court, a hundred cubits long, and a hundred cubits broad, foursquare; and the altar that was before the house.

were to be slaughtered. 40 And on the outside of the vestibule at the entrance of the north gate were two tables; and on the other side of the vestibule of the gate were two tables. 41 Four tables were on the inside, and four tables on the outside of the side of the gate, eight tables, on which the sacrifices were to be slaughtered. 42 And there were also four tables of hewn stone for the burnt offering, a cubit and a half long, and a cubit and a half broad, and one cubit high, on which the instruments were to be laid with which the burnt offerings and the sacrifices were slaughtered. 43 And hooks, a handle breadth long, were fastened round about within. And on the tables the flesh of the offering was to be laid.

44. Then he brought me from without into the inner court, and behold, there were two chambers in the inner court, one at the side of the north gate facing south, the other at the side of the south gate facing north.
45. And he said to me, This chamber which faces south is for the priests who have charge of the temple. 46. And the chamber which faces north is for the priests who have charge of the altar; these are the sons of Zadok, who alone among the sons of Levi may come near to the Lord to minister to him. 47. And he measured the court, a hundred cubits long, and a hundred cubits broad, foursquare; and the altar was in front of the temple.

7. Two Chambers on the North and South (40:44-47)

44-47. The RSV emendation of vs. 44 with the LXX is generally accepted by scholars (reading הָעַרְכֵּי אֲרוֹבִים וְאָרוֹבִים, the M.T. being obviously inconsistent in the context, since the chambers were to be used by priests, not singers. The word הָעַרְכֵּי, south, with the LXX for מְ kald, east, is an obvious correction of an easy corruption. For the Zadokite priests see 43:19; 44:19-16. The anticipatory allusion to the Zadokites in vs. 46 may be secondary (see Hölscher, Cooke, Herrmann, Bertholet), and if so, is by the editor. The court around the altar and before the temple was a perfect square.
48 Then he brought me to the vestibule of the temple and measured the jambs of the vestibule, five cubits on either side; and the breadth of the gate was fourteen cubits; and the side walls of the gate were three cubits on either side. 49 The length of the vestibule was twenty cubits, and the breadth twelve cubits; and ten steps led up to it; and there were pillars beside the jambs on either side.

41 Then he brought me to the nave, and measured the jambs; on each side six cubits was the breadth of the jambs.

8. VESTIBULE OF THE TEMPLE (40:48-49)

48-49. As the inner court was higher above the outer court than the outer court above the territory outside, so the temple platform was higher above the inner court than the inner court above the outer court. The significance of this is obvious. The pillars here are usually interpreted to be within the entrance, beside the jambs of the vestibule, but the fact that no measurements of them are given has been taken to mean that they were before the vestibule (Galili), and so correspond to the free-standing pillars of Solomon’s temple. Note also that the width of the entrance ignores their presence there (vs. 48; for the pillars of the Solomonic temple see W. F. Albright, “Two Cressets from Marissa and the Pillars of Jachin and Boaz,” Bulletin of the American Schools of Oriental Research, No. 85 [Feb., 1942], pp. 18-27; R. B. Y. Scott, “The Pillars Jachin and Boaz,” Journal of Biblical Literature, LVIII [1939], 143-49; May, “The Two Pillars Before the Temple of Solomon,” pp. 19-27). The emendations of the RSV are demanded by the context. In vs. 48 we must read יַעַרְבּ לֵועַ יַעִין, which has been omitted by homoeoteleuton. In vs. 49 read יַעִין יַעִין, twelve, with the LXX for יַעִין יַעִין, eleven, to have the total measurements come out correctly. The corresponding measurement in 1 Kings 6:3 is ten cubits. Also in vs. 49 read יַעִין, ten, for יַעִין, "which."

B. NAPE, INNER ROOM, AND OTHER APPOINTMENTS (41:1-26)

The general plan of the temple, with its threefold division of vestibule, nave, and inner room, has parallels in the ancient Near East, e.g., the eighth-century temple found at Hattina (Tell Tainat) in Syria, and the palace-temples of Sargon from his capital at Dur-Sharrukin (Khorsabad; Gordon Loud, et al., Khorsabad [Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1956], I, 80-128; for general discussions see especially Carl Watzinger, Denkmaler Palatinae [Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs, 1925], I, 88-95; Wright, "Solomon’s Temple Resurrected," pp. 17-31; "The Temple in Palestine-Syria," Biblical Archaeologist, XIV [1911], 65-77; Paul L. Garber, "Reconstructing Solomon’s Temple," ibid., XIV [1951], 2-24). This type was of Phoenician or Syrian origin, and we recall that it was Phoenician importance. Not only is the holy separated from the profane, but there are degrees within the

some one thing which is sacred above all else, supreme loyalty which is dearer even than

(b) Conscription. It is noticeable, however, that what occupies the center of the building is not the inner shrine but the altar. Further,
And the breadth of the door was ten cubits; and the sides of the door were five cubits on the one side, and five cubits on the other side; and he measured the length thereof, forty cubits, and the breadth, twenty cubits.

Then he went in inward, and measured the post of the door, two cubits; and the door, six cubits; and the breadth of the door, seven cubits.

So he measured the length thereof, twenty cubits; and the breadth, twenty cubits; and the sides of the door were five cubits on the one side, and five cubits on the other side; and he measured the length thereof, forty cubits, and the breadth, twenty cubits.

Then he went into the inner room and measured the jamb of the entrance, two cubits; and the breadth of the entrance, six cubits; and the side walls of the entrance, seven cubits.

And he measured the length of the room, twenty cubits, and its breadth, twenty cubits; and the breadth of the entrance was ten cubits; and the side walls of the entrance were five cubits on either side; and he measured the length of the nave forty cubits, and its breadth, twenty cubits.

workmen who built the temple for Solomon. Temple structures are known in Palestine from as early as Neolithic Jericho; they are particularly well illustrated in the Late Bronze Period (1550-1200) at such places as Shechem, Lachish, Beth-shan, and Megiddo.

The temple was the palace of the king, god, and the inner room his throne room.

There are so many instances of obscurities and corruptions in this chapter that space permits only a few of the many comments that should be made.

I. NAVE OF THE TEMPLE (41:1-4)

41:1. Ḥokhāl, nave, is a word of ultimate Sumerian origin (egal, Akkad. eballu) and means temple or palace, here applied to the main room of the temple. The vestibule measured 20 by 12 cubits, i.e., about 35½ by 20½ feet (40:49), the nave 20 by 40 cubits, i.e., about 35½ by 71 feet, and the inner room 20 by 20 cubits, i.e., about 35½ by 35½ feet. 1 Kings 6:20 describes the inner room as a cube, 20 cubits in height. In the Solomonic temple, the inner room was on a podium, raised above the rest of the temple, as illustrated in Canaanite temples at Beth-shan or in the temples at Khorsabad (cf. Kurt Galling, "Das Allerheiligste in Solomon's Tempel, ein Christlicher 'Thoraschrein'," Journal of the Palestine Oriental Society, XII [1922] 43-46). Instead of שָׁנָה שַׁנָּה, the breadth of the tabernacle, read שָׁנָה זְנוֹת, the breadth of the jamb, although this may be a scribal addition, and is omitted by the LXX and one Hebrew MS.

3. The inner room is called the debhir in Kings and Chronicles (1 Kings 6:5, 16, 19; etc.; 1 Chr. 4:29; 8:6, 8; etc.), and is usually translated "oracle," from the Hebrew debhar, "to speak," but this has been questioned; the word is plausibly associated with the Arabic dar, "back," i.e., the rear room. The progressively narrow entrance of the vestibule, nave, and inner room provide significant symbolism. Ezekiel enters the nave, but he does not follow the divine guide into the inner room. According to the P legislation, only the high priest could enter the inner room and he only on the day of Atonement (Lev. 16:1-34), although Ezekiel does not specify such a regulation. For שָׁנָה, and the breadth, read with the LXX, מִשְׁנֶה, and the side walls, for the measurements can fit only this reading (cf. emended text of 40:18). The side walls are the walls on each side of the entrance, the jamb measurements giving their breadth. The very narrow walls here (two cubits; contrast vs. 1; 40:18), the jamb of the entrance to the vestibule and nave) are necessary to keep the overall proportions of the temple, in view of the fact that the vestibule is here twelve cubits broad, rather than the ten in 1 Kings 6:3.

4. The most holy place: "The holy of holies," a name given to the inner room of the temple in 1 Kings 6:1-8:66; 11 Chr. 3:1-5:14, and of the tabernacle in Exod. 26:31-37.

There is only one altar, although in the old temple there were several. Thus the seer finds room at the heart of the restored community both for the presence of God and for the consecration to him of the national life. All is so designed as to lead up to that high moment when we stand facing the shrine in which the divine glory has taken up its abode, there to offer ourselves to God. The climax of the common life is in this act of dedication.

(c) Unity. Whenever possible, the building and its parts are planned in the form of a cubits before the temple: and he said unto me, This is the most holy place.
EZEKIEL

41:7
5 Then he measured the wall of the house, six cubits; and the breadth of every side chamber, four cubits, round about the house on every side.
6 And the side chambers were three, one over another, and thirty in order; and they entered into the wall which was of the house for the side chambers round about, that they might have hold, but they had not hold in the wall of the house.
7 And there was an enlarging, and a winding about still upward to the side chambers: for the winding about of the house went still upward round about the house: therefore the breadth of the house was still upward, and so increased from the lowest chamber to the highest by the midst.
bbits, beyond the nave. And he said to me, This is the most holy place.
8 Then he measured the wall of the temple, six cubits thick; and the breadth of the side chambers, four cubits, round about the temple. 9 And the side chambers were in three stories, one over another, thirty in each story. There were offsets all around the wall of the temple to serve as supports for the side chambers, so that they should not be supported by the wall of the temple. 10 And the side chambers became broader as they rose, corresponding to the enlargement of the offset from story to story round about the temple; on the side of the temple a stairway led upward, and thus one went up from the lowest story to the top story.

2. SIDE CHAMBERS (41:5-11)

These chambers or vaults appear also in I Kings 6:6-10 (cf. the analogies in the Khorsabad temples). They went around three sides of the temple, and were in three stories, with thirty chambers in each story. All had the same length. In I Kings 6:6 the breadth is given as five, six, and seven cubits respectively for the three stories. Here the lower chambers are four cubits broad (vs. 5), and the upper two stories probably five and six cubits respectively. The breadth of the outer wall, here five cubits (vs. 9), in Solomon’s temple would have been four. The entrance into the side chambers was by a doorway on the north and on the south side of the temple, and the stairway to get to the upper floor was probably at this point (vs. 7). The purpose of these side chambers is not given, but they were probably for the paraphernalia of the temple service and for holding the gifts to the temple, e.g., “the treasures of the house of the Lord” mentioned in I Kings 14:26; 15:15; 11 Kings 14:14; etc. Leroy Waterman has argued that the building was originally built by Solomon as a royal treasury and only later used as a temple, but the architectural form is that of a temple (see “The Damaged Blueprints of the Temple of Solomon,” Journal of Near Eastern Studies, XXX [1944], 284-94; “The Treasures of Solomon’s Private Chapel,” ibid., VI [1947], 161-63).
5. The inner wall was six cubits thick at the base, and so probably five cubits thick opposite the second story, and four cubits opposite the third story.
6. Outside: Read with the LXX (cf. I Kings 6:30) for נורי, and they entered.
The verse is obscure, although the RSV gives the intended sense: contrast the fairly literal KJV. This structural formation is to keep the side chambers from infringing on the greater sanctity of the walls of the nave and inner room.
7. This verse is also very obscure and doubtless corrupt; contrast the KJV with the RSV, וּהַנָּשִׁי (RSV as they rose [?]” for נורי, “and it went round about”); cf. KJV and there was... a winding about. Read with the LXX, כְּרֻפֵּת תַּעֲבִר, “corresponding to the increase from the wall,” i.e., the enlargement of the offset (RSV), for נָשַׁי בְּדִשֵּׁבָה, for the winding about of the house. On the side of the temple a stairway led upward: The RSV apparently reads שֵּׁבֶת בֵּית הַפַּרְצִים, אֶלָּא שֶׁנִּחְנוּ בָּרוּךְ, instead of שֵּׁבֶת הַפַּרְצִים שֶׁנִּחְנוּ בָּרוּךְ, therefore the breadth of the house... upward. A satisfactory reconstruction is difficult. For and thus (27) read “and from” (πρὸς) with one MS, the LXX, and Syriac, i.e., “and from the lowest story one went up to the top story.” etc.

293
8 I saw also the height of the house round about: the foundations of the side chambers were a full reed of six great cubits.

9 The thickness of the wall, which was for the side chamber without, was five cubits: and that which was left was the place of the side chambers that were within.

10 And between the chambers was the wideness of twenty cubits round about the house on every side.

11 And the doors of the side chambers were toward the place that was left, one door toward the north, and another door toward the south: and the breadth of the place that was left was five cubits round about.

12 Now the building that was before the separate place at the end toward the west was seventy cubits broad; and the wall of the building was five cubits thick round about, and the length thereof ninety cubits.

13 So he measured the house, a hundred cubits long; and the separate place, and the building, with the walls thereof, a hundred cubits long:

14 Also the breadth of the face of the house, and of the separate place toward the east, a hundred cubits.

8. The temple was on a platform or podium six cubits high, i.e., about ten feet. For גִּבֹּה (gibbah), height, raised platform, some suggest גַּלְבָּה, interpreted as “pavement,” i.e., the space on the platform left free beyond the outer wall. The RSV changes (קָנָה), full, to גִּבֹּה (gibbah), translated measured. On גִּבֹּה, translated long, see 40:5 (cf. 13:18 where מְדִי טַעַמְיֵן means “wrists” or “elbow”; see also Jer. 38:12). Is it a technical architectural term, or does it refer to the carpenter’s square? (Cf. Gallin, Biblische Realklexikon, pp. 283, 285.)

9. The Syriac addition of five cubits fits the situation (cf. “the pavement” in Exeg. on vs. 8). This is repeated at the end of vs. 11. Between the platform: Read מַסְטַר for מְשִׁקְרָה, place [house] of the side chambers, and connecting with vs. 10.

10. This breadth of twenty cubits belongs to the temple yard mentioned in vs. 12. Some would transpose vs. 10 and 11, since vs. 11 is still concerned with the side chambers and platform.

3. The Structure West of the Temple (41:12)

12. The function of this structure is not explained. It may have been an open court, since an area this size could hardly be roofed without pillars. It may have been the stalls (סְבָאִים) of II Kings 23:11 to 26:18 for the sacred horses which, with the chariots, were removed by Josiah; these passages show that there was in the Solomonic and postexilic temple an entrance at this point (see discussion by Gallin).

4. Measurements of the Temple and Yard (41:13-15a)

The temple was one hundred cubits long, including the side chambers and outer wall. The yard behind the temple plus the building behind the temple (vs. 13b) measured 15 And he measured the length of the building over against the separate place which was behind it, and the galleries thereof on the one side and on the other side, a hundred cubits, with the inner temple, and the porches of the court;

16 The doorposts, and the narrow windows, and the galleries round about on their three stories, over against the door, ceiled with wood round about, and from the ground up to the windows, and the windows were covered;

17 To that above the door, even unto the inner house, and without, and by all the wall round about within and without, by measure.

18 And it was made with cherubim and palm trees, so that a palm tree was between a cherub and a cherub; and every cherub had two faces;

19 So that the face of a man was toward the palm tree on the one side, and the face of a young lion toward the palm tree on the other side: it was made through all the house round about.

15 Then he measured the length of the building facing the yard which was at the west and its walls on either side, a hundred cubits.

The nave of the temple and the inner room and the outer vestibule were paneled and round about all three had windows with recessed frames. Over against the threshold the temple was paneled with wood round about, from the floor up to the windows (now the windows were covered). To the space above the door, even to the inner room, and on the outside. And on all the walls round about in the inner room and the nave were carved likenesses of cherubim and palm trees, a palm tree between cherub and cherub. Every cherub had two faces. The face of a man toward the palm tree on the one side, and the face of a young lion toward the palm tree on the other side. They were carved on the whole temple round about; one hundred cubits. The line measured in vs. 14 is also the west side of the inner court (40:47).

15a. And its walls: Read הַרְשָׁפֶטָה הָרֹאשׁ for הַרְשָׁפֶטָה הָרֹאשׁ, which has been given an Aramaic suffix.

5. DETAILS OF THE TEMPLE DECORATION (41:15b-26)

15b. The M.T. has “the inner nave” (cf. KJV), but read “the nave and the inner [room]”; cf. LXX; see RSV. The outer: Read שערת after the LXX for רֹשֶׁת, the court.

16. Paneled: Read with the LXX פַּנֵא for פּוּנֵא, “the thresholds” (cf. KJV). We should read פְלֵא for the uncertain פְלֵא פְלֵא, galleries, and interpret here as in I Kings 6:3, windows with recessed frames (see Exeg. on 40:16 for this type of window). If we retain the less probable KJV arrangement of the text, the reference is perhaps to windows around the three divisions of the temple (see 1 Kings 6:5). Neither the arrangement nor the sense of the verse is clear. The expression פְּלֵא פְּלֵא, paneled with wood, may be right, but some would read the letter shin instead of sin, and interpret as “shahihp wood,” after the cuneiform šbp, a black wood, here used for paneling (cf. G. R. Driver, “Notes on Hebrew Lexicography,” Journal of Theological Studies, XXIII [1922], 409).

17-18. Carved likenesses: Read פְּלֵא פְּלֵא for the meaningless פְּלֵא פְּלֵא, measures and carved (RSV mg.). For these decorative motifs in the temple of Solomon see I Kings 6:29 (cf. 1 Kings 7:29, 36). Archaeological illustrations of these motifs appear particu-
The posts of the temple were squared, and the face of the sanctuary, the appearance of the one as the appearance of the other. The altar of wood was three cubits high, and the length thereof two cubits; and the corners thereof, and the length thereof, and the walls thereof, were of wood: and he said unto me, This is the table that is before the Loorn. And the temple and the sanctuary had two doors. And the doors had two leaves apiece, two turning leaves; two leaves for the one door, and two leaves for the other door. And there were made on them, on the doors of the temple, cherubim and palm trees, like as were made upon the walls; and there were thick planks upon the face of the porch without. And there were narrow windows and palm trees on the one side and on the other side, on the sides of the porch, and upon the side chambers of the house, and thick planks.

Larily in ivory inlays, such as those from Samaria (see Wright, "Solomon's Temple Resurrected," Figs. 5-9). With the cherubim in vs. 19 cf. those in 1:10.

20 On the wall. Read with vs. 25 בָּנוּן, and the wall (cf. KJV). Of the temple is marked in the M.T. as dubious; it is best omitted.

21-22. The table of the bread of the Presence was to be at the entrance to the inner room. The KJV suggests the meaningless character of the present text. The breadth of the table or altar must be supplied with the LXX, i.e., two cubits broad, and also with the LXX must be read יֵשׁוֹ, and its base, for דִּבֵּשׁ, and its length. The table of the breadth of the Presence, made of cedar and overlaid with gold, appears in I Kings 6:20; see also Exod. 25:23-30 (made of acacia wood overlaid with gold); cf. Lev. 24:5-9; etc. The altar in front of the entrance to the inner room is known in excavated Canaanite temples (see Alan Rowe, Topography and History of Beth-shan [Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1950], Pl. 56, No. 2; see also Schaeffer, Cuneiform Texts of Ras Shamra-Ugarit, Pl. XXVII, Fig. 2, for a relief from Canaanite Ugarit showing what is apparently a ritual scene with a table upon which are, so it seems, loaves of bread arranged in two lots (cf. Lev. 24:5-9; II Chr. 29:18).

23-24. The text is not clear, but the rendering double door for two doors helps give the meaning. The text uses לֶקַח, doors, in the sense of "leaves," rather than יֵשׁוֹ (cf. I Kings 6:35). The doors would swing on posts set in sockets.

25. The word מַעֲנֵי, canopy, is uncertain; the versions suggest "beams" (cf. KJV; see I Kings 7:6). The canopy would perhaps be formed by projecting beams.

26. The recessed windows and palm tree decorations were on the sidewalls of the vestibule (see vs. 3). The latter part of the verse makes no sense and is generally omitted by scholars as a gloss, perhaps by a scribe who would interpret מַעֲנֵי in vs. 25.
42 Then he brought me forth into the outer court, the way toward the north: and he brought me into the chamber that was over against the separate place, and which was before the building toward the north.

2 Before the length of a hundred cubits was the north door, and the breadth was fifty cubits.

3 Over against the twenty cubits which were for the inner court, and over against the pavement which was for the outer court, was gallery against gallery in three stories.

4 And before the chambers was a walk of ten cubits breadth inward, a way of one cubit; and their doors toward the north.

C. The Priests’ Chambers (42:1-20)

In vs. 1-14 are described the priests’ chambers in the area between the temple yard (see 41:12) and the outer court, to the north and south of the temple. There the priests store their share from the sacrifices, and eat their meals. There also they deposit, before they go out into the less sacred outer court, the garments in which they minister. Only the chambers on the north are described in detail, for those on the south have corresponding arrangements. The detailed description of the chambers on the north is most obscure and the text is obviously corrupt. They may have formed two structures, the southern section lying alongside the temple yard measuring 100 by 20 cubits, and the northern section facing the outer court 50 by 20 cubits, each with a passageway 10 cubits wide between, the chambers within these structures arranged in three stories. Or they may have formed a single structure with the chambers in three rows but at different levels; the row facing the outer court is thus one half as long as the other two rows, and the passageway just outside this row, protected from the outer court by a barricade.

In vs. 15-20 the over-all measurements of the temple area are given as 500 cubits square, i.e., 861.625 feet on each side.

1. Chambers to the North of the Temple Yard (42:1-16a)

42:1. The context supports the LXX ἑνωρία, inner, rather than the M.T. צרה, outer. Opposite the building on the north: i.e., opposite the north wall of the temple area (cf. 40:5), and so adjoining the outer court (vs. 8), although the text may be corrupt and we should perhaps omit opposite the building.

2. The RSV deletes כ ב aire, before, with the LXX, and reads פנים, side, for ליד, door, an obvious corruption.

3. The twenty cubits are perhaps the width of the yard (see 41:10). In three stories. Some translate “in the third story.” The phrase may also mean that the rooms were arranged in three rows on the slope which led down in three descending terraces to the outer court from the temple yard (Galling; cf. Richter).

4. Inward may be retained, although omitted by the LXX and Syriac, if the passage separated the chambers into two structures, and so the doors were on the north side of the longer structure, opening into the passageway. Galling interprets both the passageway and the doors to be on the north side of that part of the chambers which faced the outer court (vs. 7). A hundred cubits long: Reading נון כב שער with the LXX and Syriac for תועה תוש צער, a way of one cubit, a probable error, although Galling reads “and a wall [תוע for צער] of one cubit,” i.e., the wall of vs. 7.
5. Now the upper chambers were shorter: for the galleries were higher than these, than the lower, and than the middlemost of the building.

6. For they were in three stories, but had not pillars as the pillars of the courts: therefore the building was straitened more than the lowest and the middlemost from the ground.

7. And the wall that was without over against the chambers, toward the outer court on the forpart of the chambers, the length thereof was fifty cubits.

8. For the length of the chambers that were in the outer court was fifty cubits: and, lo, before the temple were a hundred cubits.

9. And from under these chambers was the entry on the east side, as one goeth into them from the outer court.

10. The chambers were in the thickness of the wall of the court toward the east, over against the separate place, and over against the building.

11. And the way before them was like the appearance of the chambers which were toward the north, as long as they, and as broad as they; and all their goings out were both according to their fashions, and according to their doors.

12. And according to the doors of the chambers that were toward the south was a door in the head of the way, even the way the north. 5. Now the upper chambers were narrower, for the galleries took more away from them than from the lower and middle chambers in the building. 6. For they were in three stories, and they had no pillars like the pillars of the outer court; hence the upper chambers were set back from the ground more than the lower and the middle ones. 7. And there was a wall outside parallel to the chambers, toward the outer court, opposite the chambers, fifty cubits long. 8. For the chambers on the outer court were fifty cubits long, while those opposite the temple were a hundred cubits long. 9. Below these chambers was an entrance on the east side, as one enters them from the outer court, 10. where the outside wall begins.

On the south also, opposite the yard and opposite the building, there were chambers with a passage in front of them; they were similar to the chambers on the north, of the same length and breadth, with the same exits and arrangements and doors.

12. And below the south chambers was an entrance on the east side, where one enters.

6. Read הַמַּעֲרָה, the outer, supplying the word court, for the M.T. וְהַמַּעֲרָה, the courts, another probable textual corruption (cf. LXX ἄξονα εἴρηκαν, "the outer ones"). Just what is intended by pillars of the outer court is not clear, possibly the expression designates the pillars belonging to the rooms on the pavement, although they were one-storied and hardly in need of columns for roof supports. The phrase may be a scribal addition referring to a later portico arrangement.

7. This wall, perhaps better translated as "fence" or "party wall" (יָדוּ), fifty cubits long, may have been an eastward extension of the fifty-cubits-long wall of the chambers adjoining the outer court, the party wall plus the wall of the chambers equaling the hundred-cubits-length of the chambers on the inner court. Gallung takes it as a barricade parallel to and outside of the fifty-cubit wall of the chambers on the court, with the passageway of vs. 4 between the two.

9-10a. See the KJV for a more literal rendering of the last part of the verse: the RSV reads with the LXX σταυρωμα, lit., "at the head" (cf. begins for בְּרָאשׁ, in the breadth [thickness]), and וַחַלְקֵיתָם, outside wall, for יְבָעַר, wall of the court.

2. Corresponding Chambers to the South of the Temple Yard (12:10b-12)

10b. The RSV reads with the LXX σταυρωμα, the south, for מִשְׁמַר, the east.

11. Read וְהַמַּעֲרָה, lit., "and like their exits" (hence RSV) for וְהַמַּעֲרָה, and all their exits (RSV mg.).

12. The M.T. is very obscure, but the meaning should correspond to vss. 9-10.
directly before the wall toward the east, as one entereth into them.

13 ¶ Then said he unto me, The north chambers and the south chambers, which are before the separate place, they be holy chambers, where the priests that approach unto the LoRD shall eat the most holy things: there shall they lay the most holy things, and the meat offering, and the sin offering, and the trespass offering: for the place is holy.

14 When the priests enter therein, then shall they not go out of the holy place into the outer court, but there they shall lay their garments wherein they minister; for they are holy, and shall put on other garments, and shall approach to those things which are for the people.

15 Now when he had made an end of measuring the inner house, he brought me forth toward the gate whose prospect is toward the east, and measured it round about.

16 He measured the east side with the measuring reed, five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed round about.

17 He measured the north side, five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed round about.

18 He measured the south side, five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed.

19 ¶ He turned about to the west side, and measured five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed.

20 He measured it by the four sides: it had a wall round about, five hundred reeds long, and five hundred broad, to make a the passage, and opposite there was a dividing wall.

21 Then he said to me, "The north chambers and the south chambers opposite the yard are the holy chambers, where the priests who approach the LoRD shall eat the most holy offerings: there shall they put the most holy offerings — the cereal offering, the sin offering, and the guilt offering; for the place is holy. When the priests enter the holy place, they shall not go out of it into the outer court without laying there the garments in which they minister, for these are holy; they shall put on other garments before they go near to that which is for the people."

22 Now when he had finished measuring the interior of the temple area, he led me out by the gate which faced east, and measured the temple area round about. He measured the east side with the measuring reed, five hundred cubits by the measuring reed. Then he turned and measured the north side, five hundred cubits by the measuring reed. Then he turned and measured the south side, five hundred cubits by the measuring reed. Then he turned to the west side and measured, five hundred cubits by the measuring reed. He measured it on the four sides. It had a wall around it, five hundred cubits long and five...
43. Afterward he brought me to the gate, even the gate that looketh toward the east: 2 And behold, the glory of the God of Israel came from the way of the east: and hundred cubits broad, to make a separation between the holy and the common. 43. Afterward he brought me to the gate, the gate facing east. 2 And behold, the glory of the God of Israel came

D. THE ALTAR OF BURNT OFFERING (43:1-27)

Twenty years earlier Ezekiel had had a vision of the departure of the glory of Yahweh (10:1-22; 11:22-23). Now he pictures its return (vs. 1-5), and the enthroned Deity directs the prophet to describe to the people the temple arrangements and laws (vs. 6-12). The latter part of the chapter gives the directions for the construction of the great altar of burnt offerings before the temple (vs. 13-17) and the regulations for its consecration (vs. 18-27). Vs. 13-27 are thought to be secondary by several scholars (cf. Herrmann, Hilscher, Matthews, Cooke, et al.), and vs. 18-27 seem to reflect the influence of P (cf. Bertholet and Exeg. below) or to be closely related to it. The transition between vs. 12 and vs. 13 is abrupt. It is curious that the description of the altar is postponed to this point. One would have expected it to have been given earlier through being measured by the divine guide (cf. Galling). Did it originally stand after 40:17? Other parts of the description of the temple are certainly displaced. The editor (?) may be responsible for its present form and position, associating it here with the regulations for the consecration of the altar, which would have been out of place in chs. 40-42 and which belong to the later portions of chs. 40-48. The editor’s hand is not absent from vs. 6-11. Something of the difficulties of interpretation may be seen in the oft noted fact that 43:1-11 and 44:1-5 contain parallel pictures of the glory of Yahweh in the temple and directions to tell cultic ordinances and laws. It has also been suggested that 43:1 cannot be the original introduction to the chapter, since according to 42:15 Ezekiel is already at the east gate.

1. RETURN OF THE GLORY OF YAHWEH (43:1-5)

The return of the glory of Yahweh to the temple is reflected often in the psalms and in other parts of O.T. literature (see the studies of Mowinckel, Morgenstern, et al.). The glory of Yahweh could be thought to be above the throne chariot rather than integral with it (cf. 1:28; 20:4, 18; 11:22), and it has been thought that only the glory of Yahweh, without the throne chariot, appears in this vision (cf. Bertholet). But the sound of many waters in vs. 2 suggests the noise of the cherubim (cf. 1:24).

43:1. Omit וַיַּעַל, gate (=even the gate), with the versions, repeated by ditomorph. Facing: With one MS read וַיַּעַל, “its face,” as in vs. 4; 40:6 instead of וַיַּעַל.

2. For the many waters see 1:24; 19:10; 31:4; etc. (cf. Rev. 1:15; 14:2; 17:1; 19:6).

The earth shone with his glory reflects the solar symbolism in the concept of the glory of Yahweh (see also Isa. 60:1-3; Deut. 33:2; Isa. 24:23; Hab. 3:3-4; cf. Luke 2:9; see H. G. May, “The Creation of Light in Genesis 1.5,” Journal of Biblical Literature, LVIII (1939), 209-11).
his voice was like a noise of many waters; and the earth shone with his glory. 3 And it was according to the appearance of the vision which I saw, even according to the vision that I saw when I came to destroy the city; and the visions were like the vision that I saw by the river Chebar; and I fell upon my face. 4 And the glory of the Lord came into the house by the way of the gate whose prospect is toward the east. 5 So the spirit took me up, and brought me into the inner court; and, behold, the glory of the Lord filled the house. 6 And I heard him speaking unto me out of the house; and the man stood by me.

3. Like the vision (RSV mg.) is ditography from a little farther on in the verse; it is omitted by the LXX. The visions is likewise due to ditography, although the LXX appears to have read נאショップו ונהב, “and the vision of the chariot,” for ונהב, “and visions like the visions” (cf. KJ V). When he came follows six MSS, Theol., and the Vulg.; contrast when I came.

4. For the significance of the east gate see Exeg. on 40:6-16 and references cited there.

5. Cf. the glory of Yahweh filling the temple in Isa. 6:1-3; 1 Kings 8:11; 2 Chr. 5:14 (cf. Isa. 4:5); for the glory of Yahweh filling the tabernacle, see Exod. 40:34-38; Lev. 9:23.

2. Yahweh Speaks from the Inner Sanctuary (43:6-12)

The most holy place or דברת was the throne room of Yahweh’s palace, and there were his throne and his footstool (vs. 7). Numerous relics from the ancient Near East picture the king and king-god with throne and footstool. Cf. the viewpoint of P, and contrast that in Solomon’s prayer at the dedication of the temple in 1 Kings 8:27 (RV), where it is affirmed that the temple cannot really contain Yahweh (see also Isa. 66:1; Morgenstern, “The Book of the Covenant,” Hebrew Union College Annual, V [1928], 72-81). The presence of Yahweh in the temple necessitates and emphasizes the distinction between the sacredness of the temple area as over against the profane territory outside, and the palace can no longer be essentially a part of the temple complex as in the pre-exilic period (see 1 Kings 6:1-10; 7:1-12; cf. 11 Kings 12:20; 20:8; see the suggested reconstruction of palace and temple in Galling, Biblisches Reallexikon, pp. 411-12; for the arrangements at Sargon’s capital at Khorsabad, or the temple immediately adjoining the palace at Tell Tainat, see references cited in Exeg. on 41:26; cf. also the shrine in the house of the community leader [7] in Judg. 17). In the pre-exilic period the king was a very real head of the cultus, and the temple had something of the character of a royal chapel (see Amos 7:13). Before Hezekiah the tombs of the kings are said to have been with and forgiven, so that there is nothing more to fear. We may pause here to reflect once more on that theme of the sovereignty and majesty of God which governs the thinking behind this book. We saw it first as the awesome and inexpressible splendor which humbled the prophet to the dust and at the same time summoned him to service. As such, it was meant to be the background of all his work. Then we saw it hovering over the city in judgment on her sins, and in the end forsaking the city because she could no longer provide a dwelling place for such holiness. Again and again it vindicated itself in the storming of cities, the ruin of shrines, and the devastation of whole countries. Exiled peoples on earth and the hopeless legions of the dead were witnesses to its might. But now the majesty and holiness of God take on their final form in blessing and restoration.

7 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, the place of my throne, and the place of the soles of my feet, where I will dwell in the midst of the children of Israel for ever, and my holy name, shall the house of Israel no more defile, neither they, nor their kings, by their whoredom, nor by the carcasses of their kings in their high places.

8 In their setting of their thresholds by my thresholds, and their post by my post, and the wall between me and them, they have even defiled my holy name by their abominations that they have committed; wherefore I have consumed them in mine anger.

9 Now let them put away their whoredom, and the carcasses of their kings, far from me, and I will dwell in the midst of them for ever.

"in the city of David" (I Kings 2:10; 11:45; 14:31; etc.), but not those of the later kings; Manasseh was buried "in the garden of his house," apparently close by the palace (II Kings 21:18), and Amon was buried in the same place (II Kings 21:26). Josiah was buried "in his own tomb" (II Kings 23:30).

Phrasology and ideology in vs. 7-9 at points recall those of the editor, who may be responsible for the present wording (cf. the profession of the name of Yahweh in vs. 7 [see xxviii on p. 51]; for analogies in diction and ideas see 16:54; 18:10-12; 23:37-39; 33:26; 36:26-27; 37:26-28).

7-9. Jerusalem itself is designated the throne of Yahweh in Jer. 3:17; 14:21 (late). Harlots: As in 23:27, a reference to licentious pagan rites; so also vs. 9 (KJV). The word בּוֹדֶה should be read, not בּוֹדֶהוֹ, in their high places, but, with twenty MSS, בּוֹדֶהוֹ, "When they died" (I), though it is perhaps the result of corrupt ditography of the following word. Possibly we should read "by the stoles of their kings at their high places," rendering בּוֹדֶה as monument or stèle as in Ugaritic (see David Neiman, "PGR: A Canaanite Cult-Object in the Old Testament," Journal of Biblical Literature, LXXVII [1948], 55-69; see also Lev. 26:30, and read, "the monuments of your idols," i.e., "your idolatrous monuments").

Their threshold and their doorposts have been interpreted as those of the tombs of the kings, which were possibly constructed to simulate a house (cf. Isa. 14:18; Job 17:13; see W. C. Graham and H. G. May, Culture and Conscience [Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1936], pp. 285-89). Note that usually the tombs were placed outside the city wall because of the uncleanness of a dead body (yet cf. 1 Sam. 25:1; 1 Kings 2:34).

And he is as marvelous, as sovereign, and as awe-inspiring in the mercy he shows as ever he was in the judgment he exercised.

7-9. Church and State—The new design for the temple implies nothing short of a revolution in the relations between church and state, to use modern language. In the older building the temple was subordinated to the palace, as is shown by the fact that Solomon took thirteen years to erect the latter and devoted only seven years to the former (1 Kings 6:38-7:1). The temple seems indeed to have been enclosed within the same court as the palace and to have been separated from it by a single wall merely (1 Kings 7:12). Furthermore, it was the practice to inter the royal dead within the sacred precincts, presumably to secure for them a share in its holiness. All this is now to be altered, and the temple is to be an independent building standing entirely in its own grounds.

In Solomon's time the temple was more a royal sanctuary than a national one. The king appointed the priest who was in charge of it (1 Kings 2:27, 35), and at a later time even
EZEKIEL 43:15

10 "And you, son of man, describe to the house of Israel the temple and its appearance and plan, that they may be ashamed of their iniquities. And if they are ashamed of all that they have done, portray the temple, its arrangement, its exits and its entrances, and its whole form; and make known to them all its ordinances and all its laws; and write down in their sight, so that they may observe and perform all its laws and all its ordinances. This is the law of the temple; the whole territory round about upon the top of the mountain shall be most holy. Behold, this is the law of the temple.

13 "These are the dimensions of the altar by cubits (the cubit being a cubit and a handbreadth); even the bottom shall be a cubit, and the breadth a cubit, and the border thereof by the edge thereof round..."
about shall be a span; and this shall be the higher place of the altar. 14 And from the bottom upon the ground even to the lower settle shall be two cubits, and the breadth one cubit; and from the lesser settle even to the greater settle shall be four cubits, and the breadth one cubit.

15 So the altar shall be four cubits; and from the altar and upward shall be four horns. 16 And the altar shall be twelve cubits long, twelve broad, square in the four squares thereof.

It concludes that the altar with its symbolism is derived from Phoenicia, going back to older Canaanite borrowings from Mesopotamia ("The Babylonian Temple-tower and the Altar of Burn-offering," Journal of Biblical Literature, XXXIX [1920], 137-42; Archaeology and Religion of Israel, pp. 150-52). The altar had a base eighteen cubits square extending one cubit beyond the lower ledge or stage. The lower ledge itself was sixteen cubits square and two cubits high. The stage above this, the upper ledge, was fourteen cubits square and four cubits high. Above this was the upper stage, the toposmost section of the altar, the har'el or מַטָ'ל, twelve cubits square and four cubits high. From each of its four corners rose a "horn" one cubit high. The total height of the altar, presuming the base to be one cubit high and counting the horns, was twelve cubits, or about 20.68 feet. Excluding the horns and base, the height was ten cubits, corresponding to that given in II Chr. 4:1 for the altar of bronze, which, however, was twenty cubits square. Around the base was a rim or "boundary" half a cubit high and a span broad, perhaps to catch the blood or, if the base was at the pavement level, to set the base oil from the pavement (see Albright). The top of the altar was reached by steps on the east side.

The material of the altar is not given, but it may have been stone (or possibly bronze). See the earlier legislation in Exod. 20:24-26, prohibiting the use of hewn stone or of steps in the altar.

13-14. Base: פִּית, lit., "bosom"; in vs. 14a, יָדוֹת תֹּפֶן, "bosom of the earth." The word recalls the Akkadian name of the foundation platform of the royal palace and of the temple of Marduk in Babylon, irat eșiti or irat kigalli, "bosom of the earth, bosom of the underworld," in inscriptions of Nebuchadrezzar (Albright, Archaeology and the Religion of Israel, p. 152). It is unnecessary to enend with Tøy, Rothstein, et al., to מַטָ'ל פְּת. "from the top of the base." Its base shall be one cubit high: With the LXX, read מְנֶה בֵּן אֲשֵׁר יָדוֹת וְתֹּפֶן, "bosom of the cubit" (!). The word מַטָ'ל, higher place (מַּטָּל), should probably be read מַטָּל, height, with the LXX, and connected with vs. 14, although 22 has been taken as the name of the lowest section of the altar, below the lower ledge (see Galling).

15. The translation altar hearth, based on an Arabic etymology, is not to be preferred; the first time the word is written מַטָ'ל, which may be translated "the 'mount of God,'" and the second time is to be read see also vs. 16a לַעֲרִיָּה, "the Ariel" (see Exeg., above). The word מַטָ'ל, "the 'mount of God,'" represents the original form (see May, "Ephod' and 'Ariel,'" p. 69). The height of the horn is taken from the LXX.
17 And the settle shall be fourteen cubits long and fourteen broad in the four squares thereof; and the border about it shall be half a cubit; and the bottom thereof shall be a cubit about; and his stairs shall look toward the east.

18 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, thus saith the Lord God: These are the ordinances of the altar in the day when they shall make it, to offer burnt offerings thereon, and to sprinkle blood thereon.

19 And thou shalt give to the priests the Levites that be of the seed of Zadok, which approach unto me to minister unto me, saith the Lord God, a young bullock for a sin offering.

20 And thou shalt take of the blood thereof, and put it on the four horns of it, and on the four corners of the settle, and upon the border round about: thus shalt thou cleanse and purge it.

21 Thou shalt take the bullock also of the sin offering, and he shall burn it in the 17 The ledge also shall be square, fourteen cubits long by fourteen broad, with a rim around it half a cubit broad, and its base one cubit round about. The steps of the altar shall face east.”

18 And he said to me, “Son of man, thus says the Lord God: These are the ordinances for the altar: On the day when it is erected for offering burnt offerings upon it and for throwing blood against it, you shall give to the Levitical priests of the family of Zadok, who draw near to me to minister to me, the Lord God, a bull for a sin offering. And you shall take some of its blood, and put it on the four horns of the altar, and on the four corners of the ledge, and upon the rim round about; thus you shall cleanse the altar and make atonement for it. You shall also take the bull of the sin offering, and it shall

4. Regulations for Consecrating the Altar (45:18-27)

These were for the purpose of removing any uncleanness, so that the altar might possess the sanctity necessary for its use and lose its “sacrificial” nature. The shift from second person singular to third person plural has been taken as an indication of the composite nature of this passage. The oracular formulas “Thus says the Lord” (vs. 18) and “Thus says the Lord” (vs. 19, 27) are characteristic of the editor’s work in chs. 40–48 (cf. 45:9, 18; 47:15, 23, etc.). The style recalls that of P in Exod. 29:36–37, where Moses is addressed and told to spend seven days making atonement for the altar (see also Lev. 8:14–15; Exod. 40:1–38; see Herrmann, Bertholet, Cooke, etc.).

18. The blood was dashed against the altar from a bowl (see Exod. 24:6 {JE}: Lev. 17:6 {H}; Exod. 29:16, 20; Num. 18:17 {P}; 1 Kings 16:13, 15).

19. The Levitical priests of the family of Zadok are in contrast with the Levites (cf. 44:9–31).

20. See Exod. 29:12; Lev. 8:14 (P). The blood on the corners and the rim consecrated all inside that area, making it holy. Horns of the altar: So the LXX and Syriac, interpreting the Hebrew the four horns of it.

21. So also the flesh of the sin offering is burnt “outside the camp” in Exod. 29:14; Lev. 8:11; 16:16. The appointed place belonging to the temple, קֶדֶם הַמַעֲרָב, is mentioned by this name only here. Neh. 3:31 mentions תַחְרֵץ הַמַעֲרָב, the Gate of Hinnom-kad (“the Muster” or “the Appointed Place”), which, however, cannot be located with appointed place of the house, without the sanctuary.
The Interpreter's Bible

22 And on the second day thou shalt offer a kid of the goats without blemish for a sin offering; and they shall cleanse the altar, as they did cleanse it with the bullock.

23 When thou hast made an end of cleansing it, thou shalt offer a young bullock without blemish, and a ram out of the flock without blemish.

24 And thou shalt offer them before the Lord, and the priests shall cast salt upon them, and they shall offer them up for a burnt offering unto the Lord.

25 Seven days shalt thou prepare every day a goat for a sin offering; they shall also prepare a young bullock, and a ram out of the flock, without blemish.

26 Seven days shall they purge the altar and purify it; and they shall consecrate themselves.

27 And when these days are expired, it shall be, that upon the eighth day, and so forward, the priests shall make your burnt offerings upon the altar, and your peace offerings; and I will accept you, saith the Lord God.

Then he brought me back the way of the gate of the outward sanctuary which looketh toward the east; and it was shut.

44 Then he brought me back to the outer gate of the sanctuary, which is burnt in the appointed place belonging to the temple, outside the sacred area.

22 And on the second day you shall offer a he-goat without blemish for a sin offering; and the altar shall be cleansed, as it was cleansed with the bull. 23 When you have finished cleansing it, you shall offer a bull without blemish and a ram from the flock without blemish. 24 You shall present them before the Lord, and the priests shall sprinkle salt upon them and offer them up as a burnt offering to the Lord. 25 For seven days you shall provide daily a goat for a sin offering; also a bull and a ram from the flock, without blemish, shall be provided.

26 Seven days shall they make atonement for the altar and purify it, and so consecrate it. 27 And when they have completed these days, then from the eighth day onward the priests shall offer upon the altar your burnt offerings and your peace offerings; and I will accept you, says the Lord God.”

Certainty, but may have belonged to the temple or palace rather than to the outer city wall (see Millar Burrows, “Nehemiah 3:1-82 as a Source for the Topography of Ancient Jerusalem,” Annual of the American Schools of Oriental Research, XIV [1953-54] 120-21).

23-27. The types of sacrifice noted here are the sin offering (תְּנִיס), the burnt offering (תְּנִיס), and the peace offering (תְּנִיס). The latter appears several times in Ugaritic literature. It is a comprehensive term for the sacrifice of animals, of which parts only were burnt on the altar, the rest being eaten in the common meal. The entire animal was burnt in a burnt offering (see George Buchanan Gray, Sacrifice in the Old Testament [Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1925], pp. 5-7, 61-66, etc.). With this passage cf. Deut. 27:1-7.

24. For salt in sacrifice see Lev. 2:15; Mark 9:49.

25. Consecrate: Lit., “fill its hands” (cf. the Assyrian umadi godi; see Jdg. 17:5, 12). The original literal significance of the expression is obviously forgotten here.

E. Ordinances Concerning Ministers in the Sanctuary (44:1-31)

The prophet is shown the closed east gate of the outer court, through which no one may enter, although the prince may sit in it to eat bread before Yahweh (vv. 1-5).

returned from exile, they built the temple and waited for the glory of God to return. And when we read the psalms which were sung in that temple, with their poignant confession of sin, their heartfelt appeal to God, and their quiet trust in his mercy, can we doubt that the glory did return?

44:1-5. The State Before God—is this a piece of legislation or part of the original vision? If the latter, there is something very striking about
Back in the inner court, the prophet is given instructions regarding those who may minister before Yahweh. Foreigners may not act as servants in charge of the sanctuary or enter the sanctuary (vv. 6-9), but the Levites shall take their place as temple servants, demoted from the priesthood because of their contacts with idolatry (vv. 10-14). Only the Levitical priests, the Zadokites, are to have full priestly standing and enter the inner court or temple (vv. 15-16). Ordinances for the Zadokites are given, regulations regarding their garments, shaving, drinking wine, marriage, teaching and judging functions, observance of the laws for feasts and sabbaths, defilement by contact with a dead person, the priestly share of the sacrifices, and eating anything which dies of itself (vv. 17-31).

Certainty in the analysis of the authorship of this chapter is more difficult than usual. We have noted how 43:1-11 is paralleled in 44:1-5. The allusion to the prince in vv. 3 is from the editor (cf. 46:1-8; see on 12:12; 34:24; 37:25; etc.). In 43:1-3 the prophet was apparently brought from the east gate directly to the inner court. If the circumspect route here via the north gate is to avoid using the east gate of the inner court, in the light of the regulations in 44:1, the editor may be responsible for it. Possibly 43:1 ff. does not presume a closed east gate (see Hölscher). In 47:2, however, the prophet is also brought via the north gate. It is more or less generally agreed that the legislation in vv. 6-31 is composite (Herrmann, Sellin, Matthews, Cooke, Bertholet, et al.), and despite general evidence of what has been called the editor's phraseology, there may be a kernel here which we should ascribe to Ezekiel, although it is difficult to delineate. A hint of this is suggested in the fact that vv. 29-30 presume no inheritance for the priests, in contrast with the very definite inheritance ascribed to them by the editor in 45:1-5; 48:10; etc. So the legislation for the contribution to the priests in 44:30, which may be in conflict with the legislation for the contributions to the prince (see 45:15-16), may derive ultimately from an original Ezekiel legislation. A number of scholars suggest variant sources here. It would seem reasonable that Ezekiel presented some regulations for his elaborate temple, very possibly laws in which the Zadokites alone were the true priests as here. The argument that Ezekiel would never give to the Zadokites the clean slate presumed here, in view of the picture of corruptions in the temple courts in ch. 8 (Hölscher), may be countered by the presumption of a changed attitude on the part of the prophet in his later years; or it may be that the Zadokites were not primarily responsible for those corruptions, and we may believe that the Zadokite priesthood under Hilkiah had taken a not insignificant part in the Deuteronomic reform (2 Kings 22:11-14; 25:4, 21). The chambers in which the priests were to put their robes (42:13-14 [by Ezekiel?]) seem to presuppose legislation like that in 44:10, which is also consonant with 46:20.

The zigzag sequence of movements of the prophet in 42:15; 43:1; 5: 44:1; 4 suggests to scholars disarrangements of the text (cf. Hölscher, Matthews, Cooke). Questions are raised in particular about the secondary character of the series of personal regulations in vss. 20-31.

I. THE CLOSED OUTER EAST GATE (44:1-3)

After Yahweh's entrance had hallowed the gate, the entrance of a mortal would have desecrated it or made a mortal taboo. The closed gates also perhaps stood as a symbol of the fact that Yahweh would never again leave the temple (cf. 43:7); i.e., there would be no further destruction of the temple or city, for the new age had arrived. Also it may suggest that never again could the east gate be used in connection with the pagan rites of the worship of the sun earlier mentioned in 8:16-18. The east gate of the

it. The seer has watched the glory of the Lord entering the temple by the eastern gate, with the brilliance of the sunrise and the majesty of the ocean at its height (43:2). When it has passed through, the gate swings to behind it, closed by no mortal hand. And closed it must remain. But as the seer continues to look, he sees a solitary figure threading his way through the outer court and entering the vestibule of the great gate which has been thus forever hallowed. There he sits and worships "alone with the alone," the nearest that one who is not a con-
Then the Lord said unto me: This gate shall be shut; it shall not be opened, and no man shall enter in by it; because the Lord God of Israel hath entered in by it, therefore it shall be shut.

It is for the prince; the prince, he shall sit in it to eat bread before the Lord; he shall enter by the way of the porch of that gate, and shall go out by the way of the same.

Then brought he me the way of the north gate before the house: and I looked, and beheld, the glory of the Lord filled the house of the Lord: and I fell upon my face.

And the Lord said unto me, Son of man, mark well, and behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears all that I say unto thee concerning all the ordinances of the house of the Lord, and all the laws thereof; and mark well the entering in of the house, with every going forth of the sanctuary.

And thou shalt say to the rebellious, even to the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; O ye house of Israel, let it suffice you of all your abominations.

sacred area (Haram esh-Sherif) in Jerusalem, the so-called "Golden Gate," is walled up to the entrance is impossible.

44:2. The Lord in vs. 2a is inconsonant with vs. 2b, and perhaps best omitted with the RSV. The speaker is the divine guide.

Whereas the present text might possibly be interpreted only the prince, it is doubtless corrupt (cf. KJV): the second prince, which in Hebrew is without the article, is due to diacritography and is omitted by the Syriac and LXX. The initial ש, sign of the accusative, is best emended to ש, only. Eat bread: In the sacrificial meal.

2. THE PROPHET IS BROUGHT BEFORE THE TEMPLE (44:4-5)

4-5. North gate: According to 44:1 the east gate is closed on weekdays. Those who may be admitted: Read פַּשֵׁשׁ for פַּשָׁג, entrance. Those who are to be excluded: Repoint פַּשֵׁשׁ from מָשְׁא, "exist" (cf. KJV), to מָשְׁאֵה; see 43:11 where "entrances" and "exists" are consonant with the context.

3. PROSCRIPTION OF FOREIGNERS (44:6-9)

These foreigners set to keep charge of the sanctuary (vs. 8) recall the temple slaves said to be descendants of the Gibeonites (Josh. 9:33), as well as those selected from the Midianites and "given" to the Levites in Num. 31:30, 47 (P); see also the Nethinim.

sacred person can come to the presence of God. Who is he? He is the prince, the civil head of the community.

The picture thus sketched unites the state's independence of priestly control with its dependence on the divine authority. Even in the sphere of religion the state has its place and its rights, for it too is the servant of God as truly as the church, albeit in a very different way. It is directly under God without needing any church as its intermediary. We must resist at once any form of clericalism and any claim that the state is above the moral law.

5-51. The Consecration of the Community:

This passage can be understood only as we bear in mind what priesthood means in the O.T.
7 In that ye have brought into my sanctuary strangers, uncircumcised in heart, and uncircumcised in flesh, to be in my sanctuary, to pollute it, even my house, when ye offer my bread, the fat and the blood, and they have broken my covenant because of all your abominations.

8 And ye have not kept the charge of mine holy things: but ye have set keepers of my charge in my sanctuary for yourselves.

9 ¶ Thus said the Lord God: No stranger, uncircumcised in heart, nor uncircumcised in flesh, shall enter into my sanctuary, of any stranger that is among the children of Israel.

10 And the Levites that are gone away far from me, when Israel went astray, which went astray from me after their idols, they shall even bear their iniquity.

11 Yet they shall be ministers in my sanctuary, having charge at the gates of the house, and ministering to the house: they shall no more come near to me to do the work of the sanctuary.

44:11

("given ones") of the Chronicler, whose family names are listed in Ezra 2:43-54; Neh. 7:16-56, perhaps descendents of captives, as Ezra 8:20 may imply in asserting that David and his princes gave the Nethinim for the service of the Levites; cf. "the sons of Solomon's servants" as temple servants (Ezra 2:25-58; Neh. 7:57-60). See also the foreign temple guards, the Carites (II Kings 11:14-8; cf. Neh. 13:1-8). The Nethinim have been compared with the Babylonian order of temple servants known as širkā, meaning "given one" (see R. P. Dougherty, The Shirkātu of Babylonian Deities [New Haven: Yale University Press, 1923], pp. 90-91).

In Herod's temple a ritual wall separated the outer court, the court of the Gentiles, from the inner courts, and inscriptions in Greek and Latin forbade a Gentile to pass beyond it on pain of death. A complete inscription in Greek and a fragment of another have been recovered (see J. H. Illiffe, "The ΘΑΝΑΤΟΣ Inscription from Herod's Temple," Quarterly of the Department of Antiquities in Palestine, VI [1936-37], 1-3).

7. For idea of the uncircumcised in heart see Jer. 4:4 (late); 9:26 (late): Deut. 10:16; 30:6 (R.V.); Lev. 26:41 (H.); note also uncircumcised lips in Exod. 6:12, 30 (P) and uncircumcised ears in Jer. 6:10. For legislation regarding the food, the fat, and the blood, see Lev. 3:16-17 (P); cf. Gen. 9:4 (P), this passage recalling the former. Morgenstern argues for the period of Ezra as the date of this legislation against foreigners (see "Two Prophecies from 520-516 B.C.", Hebrew Union College Annual, XXII [1949], 422; cf. also Holmberg).

8-9. Extend ἐναρξαί, for yourselves, to ἐναρξάμεθα, therefore.

4. The Levites' Service in the Sanctuary (44:10-14)

10-14. The Levites rather than the foreigners are to serve as ministers in the sanctuary, to act as gatekeepers, to kill the sacrificial animals, and to wait on the people man and God—that is there in any case. He enables man to enter into God's presence in spite of this barrier. Hence we must not suppose that behind these strict regulations for the priesthood lies a national life given over to secularism and satisfied with an official and shall slay the burnt offering and the sacrifice for the people; and they shall stand before them to minister unto them.
44:12 THE INTERPRETER'S BIBLE

12 Because they ministered unto them before their idols, and caused the house of Israel to fall into iniquity; therefore have I lifted up mine hand against them, saith the Lord God, and they shall bear their iniquity.

13 And they shall not come near unto me, to do the office of a priest unto me, nor come near to any of my holy things, in the most holy place: but they shall bear their shame, and their abominations which they have committed.

14 But I will make them keepers of the charge of the house, for all the service thereof, and for all that shall be done therein.

15 ¶ But the priests the Levites, the sons of Zadok, that kept the charge of my sanctuary when the children of Israel went astray from me, they shall come near to me to minister unto me, and they shall stand before me to offer unto me the fat and the blood, saith the Lord God:

in the outer court. Much of the phraseology here recalls the editor. So idols, gil'âlim (vs. 10, 12; see 14:1-11 with much similar phraseology; cf. also 48:11); bear their punishment in vs. 10, 12 (see 4:4; 14:10; cf. Lev. 10:17; 16:22; Num. 20:15; Isa. 53:11); serving in the temple in vs. 11 (see 45:5; 46:21); stumbling block of iniquity in vs. 12 (see xii on p. 50); "sworn with uplifted hand" in vs. 12 (see xxix on p. 51); abominations which they have committed in vs. 13 (see 33:29; 43:8). Because of parallel expressions in Num. 31:1-4:49 (P), it has been suggested that vs. 12:14 are a later expansion of vs. 9:16 (Cooke).

5. REGULATIONS FOR THE ZADOKITES (44:15-31)

The Zadokites alone may minister to Yahweh as the recognized priesthood. They were descended from Zadok, who suddenly appears as a fellow priest of Abiathar at the time of David (II Sam. 8:17; 15:24 ff.); by backing Solomon as successor of David he became the chief priest, while Abiathar was banished to Anathoth (see I Kings 1:8; 2:25-27, 35). It has been suggested that Zadok was actually a Jehu'site priest of Jerusalem before David's capture of that city (H. H. Rowley, "Zadok and Nehushan," Journal of vicarious piety. The consecration of the priesthood is to be taken as symbolizing and expressing the consecration of the entire community from which it is drawn and in whose name it appears before God. As the first fruits of harvest were presented at the altar in token that all belonged to God, so the priest's peculiar "holiness" meant that the nation knew itself called to be holy too.

The rules laid down fall into three groups and they represent three phases of this consecration of the community in the persons of its priestly representatives:

(a) The will to repudiate the sin of the past (vs. 6-9). That which is alien to the true life of the community is henceforth to be cast out from it. In particular, there must be no class engaged merely in routine and technical activities for which no personal qualifications are requisite. The seemingly harsh rule of vs. 9 has to be taken in its context. It is not the expression of a narrow nationalism or of religious
EZEKIEL

16 They shall enter into my sanctuary, and they shall come near to my table, to minister unto me, and they shall keep my charge.

17 ¶ And it shall come to pass, that when they enter in at the gates of the inner court, they shall be clothed with linen garments; and no wool shall come upon them, while they minister in the gates of the inner court, and within.

18 They shall have linen bonnets upon their heads, and shall have linen breeches upon their loins; they shall not gird themselves with anything that causeth sweat.

19 And when they go forth into the outer court, even into the outer court to the people, they shall put off their garments wherein they ministered, and lay them in the holy chambers, and they shall put on other garments; and they shall not sanctify the people with their garments.

20 Neither shall they shave their heads, nor suffer their locks to grow long; they shall only poll their heads.

21 Neither shall any priest drink wine, when they enter into the inner court.

Biblical Literature, L.VIII [1939], 113-41. Later legislation gave the Zadokites an ultimate Aaronite origin through Eleazar (I Chr. 6:50-53; 24:31). The Deuteronomic law had intended that the Levites should serve alongside the Zadokites as priests.

16. Approach my table: Perhaps the table of the bread of the Presence, which was before the inner sanctuary, although it has been taken to refer to the altar; my table is used symbolically in 39:20 of the table of the sacrificial feast, apparently the common meal sacrifice (cf. Mal. 1:7, 12; see Cooke).

19. The communication of holiness to the people here may be contrasted with the viewpoint in Hag. 2:10-12. The repetition of into the outer court (cf. KJV) is an obvious instance of scribal dittography and is omitted in some MSS and the versions.

21. Cf. Lev. 10:9, where the regulation is accompanied by a threat of death to those breaking it, and is associated with the distinction between the sacred and the common, bigotry, but a summons to the non’s countrymen to take upon themselves the whole responsibility of the temple cultus and not to delegate part of it to outsiders. The see thus rejects the kind of society with which we are only too familiar, one in which there is a “submerged tenth” which performs menial duties but is excluded from the rights of full membership in the community. So vs. 8 is a call to accept the responsibility of a direct relationship to God.

You have not done your sacred duties to me yourselves’ (Moffatt). The see is by no means the sacerdotalist we took him to be.

(b) The will to bear the shame of the past (vs. 10:14). The Levites must be content with a subordinate position among the temple clergy.
22 Neither shall they take for their wives a widow, nor her that is put away: but they shall take maidens of the seed of the house of Israel, or a widow that had a priest before.

23 And they shall teach my people the difference between the holy and profane, and cause them to discern between the unclean and the clean.

24 And in controversy they shall stand in judgment, and they shall judge it according to my judgments: and they shall keep my laws and my statutes in all mine assemblies: and they shall hallow my sabbaths.

25 And they shall come at no dead person to defile themselves: but for father, or for mother, or for son, or for daughter, for brother, or for sister that hath had no husband, they may defile themselves.

26 And after he is cleansed, they shall reckon unto him seven days.

27 And in the day that he goeth into the sanctuary, unto the inner court, to minister in the sanctuary, he shall offer his sin offering, saith the Lord God.

the clean and the unclean (cf. also vs. 23 with Lev. 10:10-11). Obvious literary dependence is involved.

22. See Lev. 21:7, 12, where nothing is mentioned about the priest marrying the widow of a priest, and where a separate legislation is made for the "priest who is chief among his brethren" (vs. 10-15), a distinction not known in Ezekiel.

24. This regulation discloses the ultimate theocratic character of the community; cf. the earlier pictures of the elders as judges, although the priests doubtless had certain functions as judges, particularly in religious matters; note the role of the priests and elders in Deut. 21:15 (vs. 56 is a later expansion, enlarging the function of the priests as judges). For sabbaths see Exeg. on 20:1-19 (cf. 45:17).

25-27. See also Lev. 21:1-3. Any dead person was unclean, and even the bread of mourning, eaten during the days of mourning, was unclean (see Hos. 9:4; cf. Jer. 16:5, 7). Legislation for purification of the Israelite or proselyte who has had contact with a dead body appears in Num. 19:11-22 (cf. Num. 5:1-10). Reading dehled with the Syriac in vs. 26 for cleansed brings it into accord with P's legislation for the members of the community, but if the M.T. here is retained, it would suggest a total of fourteen days' cleansing for the priests, i.e., seven days' extension after the usual cleansing. The Syriac because of their disloyalty in the days before the Exile. The past can be repudiated only in part: there is always much in it which remains with us and which we have simply to live down. So the prodigal son when he came home asked only to be a servant working for a wage, in order that he might thus make some compensation for the wrong he had done to his father. If we have erred in the past, the mark of what we did may remain upon us to the end of our days. If that is the case, there is no need to repine. Let us be content to take the lowly place which is left to us and to make it a place of honorable service.

(c) The will to lift up the present to God in utter consecration (vs. 15-31). The sons of Zadok stand at the head of the temple hierarchy. Their whole life is therefore to be vowed to that purity which will enable them to bring to God the worship of their nation. They dedicate themselves on behalf of their fellows, so that the humblest worshipper will 28 And it shall be unto them for an inheritance; I am their inheritance: and ye shall give them no possession in Israel; I am their possession.

29 Then they shall eat the meat offering, and the sin offering, and the trespass offering; and every dedicated thing in Israel shall be theirs.

30 And the firstfruits of all the firstfruits of all things, and every oblation of all, of every sort of your oblations, shall be the priest's: ye shall also give unto the priest the first of your dough, that he may cause the blessing to rest in thine house.

31 The priests shall not eat of any thing addition at the end of vs. 26—and then he shall be clean—clarifies its meaning. The singular he, his in vs. 26-27 might indicate a later expansion (cf. Bertholet, Herrmann, et al.). The oracular formula says the Lord God in vs. 27 seems to be characteristic of the editor in chs. 40-48 (cf. 43:27; 45:9; 15: 47:23; 48:29). Note to minister in the holy place in P (Exod. 26:19; 29:30; 35:19; Num. 4:12; etc.; with these verses cf. Num. 19:11-22; 31:19).

28-31. We may compare the Deuteronomic affirmation that the Levites have no inheritance, illustrated in the allotment narrative in Josh. 13:14, 33; 18:7, and the P legislation regarding the Aaronites and Levites in Num. 18:20-32; etc.

29. For the necessary emendation as in the RSV read הָעֵדָה מִן הָעֵדָה מִן (with Vulg.). The priests' share in the sacrifices is legislated in Lev. 2:3-10; 6:14-18; Num. 18:8-32; Lev. 7:1-38 (see Millar Burrows, The Literary Relations of Ezekiel [New Haven: Yale University Press, 1925], pp. 53-54). Every devoted thing (cf. Lev. 7:28; Num. 18:14; Ezra 10:7); i.e., things devoted to Yahweh under especially stringent conditions, including fields, men, beasts, and perhaps other possessions (Lev. 27:28; cf. Josh. 6:17, 19). Contrast the informal procedures for the priests' portions in 1 Sam. 2:12-17.

30. See the first of all the firstfruits legislation in Exod. 23:19 (E); 34:26 (J).
The first may perhaps be interpreted as "the best," as in 20:40, where there may be an allusion to the firstfruits, and where the contributions also appear. In Deut. 14 the firstfruits of grain, wine, oil, and fleece are set aside for the Levitical priests who have no inheritance (cf. Deut. 26:11, with its litany for bringing the firstfruits of the ground; see also Num. 18:12, 13 [P] and its context). In contrast with P, the legislation here makes no provision for the Levites (cf. Num. 18:25-32). For the first of your coarse meal see Num. 15:20-21.

31. See Lev. 7:24, addressed to all the Israelites.

feel that there is a sense in which he participates in what is done by the priest on his behalf. The scrupulous care with which the priest defends himself against any contact or relationship which might hinder his approach to God symbolizes the watchful obedience which ought to characterize the life of the nation day by day. Ritual holiness on the part of the priest stands for, and helps to promote, ethical holiness on the part of the people.

The words I am their inheritance... I am their possession (vs. 29) have a wider reference than to the priests. The land is the symbol and guarantee of security. Israel has never enjoyed that security for more than a time. Its only sure possession has been in its faith. The rabbis spoke of the law as a "portable fatherland." Wherever the Jew went, he carried the law with him and, having that, he could be at home. In this the Jew reflects the universal human situation. "For here we have no lasting city, but we seek the city which is to come" (Heb. 13:14). In this Abraham is our pattern, because "he looked forward to the city which has foundations, whose builder and maker is God" (Heb. 11:10). In the last resort it is true of us that is dead of itself, or torn, whether it be fowl or beast.

313

Moreover, when ye shall divide by lot the land for inheritance, ye shall offer an oblation unto the Lord, a holy portion of the land: the length shall be the length of five and twenty thousand reeds, not eat of anything, whether bird or beast, that has died of itself or is torn.

“When you allot the land as a possession, you shall set apart for the

F. The Sacred District and Its Environs (45:1-25)

The allotment of the land, begun here (vv. 1-9), is concluded in 47:15-48:35. The sacred district measures 25,000 by 20,000 cubits, and it is divided into two equal areas, 25,000 by 10,000 cubits, the one to the north for the Levites and the one to the south for the Zadokite priests. Within the latter is a square of 500 cubits for the temple area, around which is an open space 50 cubits deep. South of the sacred district and adjoining it is a section 25,000 by 5,000 cubits, the common land for the city of Jerusalem, within which is the city itself, 4,500 cubits square, surrounded by an open space 250 cubits deep (cf. 48:16-17). The above allotments make a perfect square of 25,000 cubits (i.e., about 8.3 miles) to the east and west of which lies the land of the prince, presumably reaching to the Jordan on the east and to the Mediterranean on the west. This whole area is again described in 48:8-22. Ch. 45 continues with regulations regarding weights and measures (vv. 10-12), the contributions to the prince (vv. 13-17), and certain festivals of the calendar year (vv. 18-25).

The allotment of the land belongs to the editor, and it falls outside the vision framework in chs. 40-48, as do the legislative portions in 45:9-25; 46:1-18. The address is no longer to the prophet, but for the larger part is in the second person plural, with a formal “Thus says the Lord God” oracular introduction as in 45:9, 18; 46:1, 16; 47:11. The editor’s prince occurs prominently. Whether anything of Ezekiel’s legislative code has been preserved here must remain a matter of conjecture. Hölscher, Matthews, Cooke, Irwin, and others find nothing of Ezekiel here (contrast Hertzmann, Bertholet).

I. The Sacred District and the Property of the City and the Prince (45:1-9)

The parallel and more complete account in 48:8-22 is not, as some commentators think, of different authorship. The author is here concerned only with the heart of the allotment; he later repeats and elaborates when giving the total allotment of the land, including the tribal territories. We should by this time be used to such repetitiveness on the part of the editor. The sacred district is called נֵבֶי, oblation, the same word used to describe an offering to the prince in vs. 13, 16, or to Yahweh set apart for the priests in 44:30 (cf. Lev. 22:12; Num. 5:9; etc.). It means a part lifted or taken from the whole. The allotment of territory to the priests and Levites here may be compared with the allotment to the Levites of towns listed in Josh. 21:1-42 (P); I Chr. 6:1-81 (see also Lev. 25:33-34; Num. 35:1-8). While found at present no earlier than in P, Albright cogently maintains that the list of Levitical towns goes back in its original form to the also that our inheritance and possession, our final home, and our final security are in God.

45:1-46:24, Sacrifices.—The main topic of these two chapters is that of the sacrificial system. We have happily passed beyond the stage at which it was thought necessary to allegorize each detail of such ritual regulations as are given here, seeing in them so many types of the sacrifice of Christ. All the same, there is something we can learn from the sections in question.

We can single out the points at which the and the breadth shall be ten thousand. This shall be holy in all the borders thereof round about.

2 And of this there shall be for the sanctuary five hundred in length, with five hundred in breadth, square round about; and fifty cubits round about for the suburbs thereof.

3 And of this measure shalt thou measure the length of five and twenty thousand, and the breadth of ten thousand: and in it shall be the sanctuary and the most holy place.

4 The holy portion of the land shall be for the priests the ministers of the sanctuary, which shall come near to minister unto the Lord; and it shall be a place for their houses, and a holy place for the sanctuary.

Lord a portion of the land as a holy district, twenty-five thousand cubits long and twenty thousand cubits broad; it shall be holy throughout its whole extent. 3 Of this a square plot of five hundred by five hundred cubits shall be for the sanctuary, with fifty cubits for an open space around it. 5 And in the holy district you shall measure off a section twenty-five thousand cubits long and ten thousand broad, in which shall be the sanctuary, the most holy place. 4 It shall be the holy portion of the land; it shall be for the priests, who minister in the sanctuary and approach the Lord to minister to him; and it shall be a place for their houses and 46:1 Ten with the LXX, instead of the M.T. ten, is required by the context. Omit the second length with four MSS, the Syriac, and Vulg. (cf. LXX).

2. There is no suggestion of such an open space around the temple in 42:20, where the wall of the temple area separates the sacred and the common. Here even the territory outside the open space is sacred. Vs. 2 is out of place; it belongs after vs. 4, for the sanctuary is in the midst of the priests’ portion (see Cornill, Bertholet, et al.)

5. Thou: Emended to plural in the RSV (cf. vs. 1, 6). For the temple as the most holy place see 45:12; however, the LXX and Syriac omit the sanctuary, and perhaps the original text designated the priests’ portion as the most sacred place, as in 48:12 (see also vs. 4).

4. And a holy place [lit., “sanctuary”] for the sanctuary: This is possibly corrupt; some read “and for the pasture lands [ץראים; LXX, Targ.] for cattle [ןレスים]” (see Bertholet, Cooke, Bever; cf. Josh. 14:4: (21:2).

and are to be opportunities for an earnest reckoning with God in repentance and atonement. It is an effort on his part to get away from a nature religion, for which God is the giver of good harvests, to a religion of conscience, in which God is moral authority and judge.

Second, the seer has learned in exile that religion must be built into the daily life of the community, not just reserved for certain special occasions (46:13-15). By the institution of the daily sacrifice he seeks to stamp upon the mind of his people that their contact with God needs to be renewed afresh each day. He made provision thus for a solemn act of worship each morning in the temple, which at a later stage was supplemented by another in the afternoon.

Third, the purpose of sacrifice throughout is to make atonement, to renew a broken relationship between Israel and the Lord. The Exile had brought with it a clear understanding that the Lord was not a national ally merely, nor was Israel his favorite. The relationship between the two was an ethical one and might at any time be gravely imperiled by sin on Israel’s part. Hence the need for constant watchfulness and for elaborate preparations which would counteract any defection on the nation’s side and would close the breach between the nation and the Lord before it became too wide. The sacrificial system bears witness to the fact that the problem of sin and its forgiveness was the one uppermost in the minds of men like our author. And these, we must remember, were the men who gave Judaism the shape it has continued to bear ever since.

But obviously there are some grave defects in this system, even as thus revised. Access to God is indirect, since the common people can draw near to him only in the person of some official representative, be he priest or prince. They stand and look on while these offer worship on their behalf (46:13). Also, while there
5 And the five and twenty thousand of length, and ten thousand of breadth, shall also the Levites, the ministers of the house, have for themselves, for a possession for twenty chambers.

6 ¶ And ye shall appoint the possession of the city five thousand broad, and five and twenty thousand long, over against the oblation of the holy portion: it shall be for the whole house of Israel.

7 ¶ And a portion shall be for the prince on the one side and on the other side of the oblation of the holy portion, and of the possession of the city, before the oblation of the holy portion, and before the possession of the city, from the west side westward, and from the east side eastward: and the length shall be over against one of the portions, from the west border unto the east border.

8 In the land shall be his possession in Israel: and my princes shall no more oppress my people: and the rest of the land shall they give to the house of Israel according to their tribes.

9 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God: Let it suffice you, O princes of Israel: remove violence and spoil, and execute judgment and a holy place for the sanctuary. ¶ Another section, twenty-five thousand cubits long and ten thousand cubits broad, shall be for the Levites who minister at the temple, as their possession for cities to live in.

7 ¶ And to the prince shall belong the land on both sides of the holy district and the property of the city, alongside the holy district and the property of the city, on the west and on the east, corresponding in length to one of the tribal portions, and extending from the western to the eastern boundary of the land. It is to be his property in Israel. And my princes shall no more oppress my people; but they shall let the house of Israel have the land according to their tribes.

9 ¶ Thus says the Lord God: Enough, O princes of Israel! Put away violence and oppression, and execute justice and right-

5. Cities to live in: Read הָרֶבְּשׁ בֵּית הָרֶבְּשׁ with the LXX for לְשׁוֹנֵי הָרֶבְּשׁ. If the emended reading is correct, it suggests a possibly deliberate variation of the older allotment of Levitical cities now reflected in the P source, where the same expression occurs in Num. 35:2; Josh. 14:4.

8-9. In [lit., “to”] the land is properly transferred with the LXX to end of vs. 7 (so RSV). The fact that the prince has his own property and so his own chief source of is no notion that “the blood of bulls and goats,” (Heb. 9:13) can of itself remove sin, the pentance of the worshiper and the mercy of the divine forgiveness are not given the prominence they deserve, but seen to be taken more or less for granted. The foreground is occupied by an elaborate system of animal sacrifice and ritual laws.

Sacrifice of this kind is impermanent in its results. The act of cleansing the sanctuary or making atonement for the temple has to be renewed every six months (every twelve months in the later law), so that one goes away from the ceremony knowing that no more has been gained than a temporary relief, and that in a short time all will have to be done over again (45:20). The writer perhaps assumes that in the restored community there will be no heinous sins, but only occasional involuntary offenses against the regulations which protect the holiness of the sanctuary. Or it may be he is more realistic than that, and supposes that those who sin willingly will forfeit the mercy of God and so be cast out from the community. But can we be satisfied with a provision for sin which deliberately refrains from dealing with its worst cases?

All this leads up to the final point that in a conscientious worshiper such a system might well produce anxiety and distress of mind. Was his offense to be classed as involuntary after all, or should it be brought under the head of what is beyond pardon? Even when the atoning ceremony had been completed, what guarantee was there that some slight inadvertence had not vitiated the whole procedure? We can justice, take away your exactions from my people, saith the Lord God.

10 Ye shall have just balances, and a just ephah, and a just bath.

11 The ephah and the bath shall be of one measure, that the bath may contain the tenth part of a homer, and the ephah the tenth part of a homer: the measure thereof shall be after the homer.

12 And the shekel shall be twenty gerahs: twenty shekels, five and twenty shekels, fifteen shekels, shall be your maneh.

*Gt. 10th twenty shekels, twenty-five shekels, fifteen shekels shall be your maneh income further guarantees the theocratic character of the community. Bitter experience lies behind the injunctions in vs. 86-9. Prince: The successiv rulers of the restored Davidec line.

2. Regulations for Weights and Measures (45:10-12)

10-12. The address, as in vs. 13 ff., is to the people. Vs. 10 begins a new paragraph; cf. the concluding formula at the end of vs. 9. For other legislation regarding weights and measures see Lev. 19:35-37; Deut. 25:13-16. The bath may be archaeologically determined to have been about 57½ gallons (22 liters) from a study of jar remains marked "bath" and "royal bath" from Tell Beit Mirsim and Tell en-Nasbeh respectively (Albright, "Excavation of Tell Beit Mirsim," pp. 58-59; McCown, Tell en-Nasbeh, pp. 250-51; see also the jars from the royal potteries, with the handles stamped with the royal seal and with a capacity of two baths in David Diringer, "The Royal Jar-Handle Stamps of Ancient Judah," Biblical Archaeologist, XII 1949, 70-86; see Angelo Segreti, "A Documentary Analysis of Ancient Palestinian Units of Measure," Journal of Biblical Literature, LXIV (1955), 357-57). The ephah is the equivalent in dry measure. The homer liquid measure would be about 57½ gallons (cf. Vol. I, p. 155). For the ratio of one to ten in vs. 11 see Isa. 5:10. It is difficult to determine archaeologically the exact weight of the shekel; the variations may be due to different local standards and to the relative inaccuracy of ancient scales compared with modern ones. In general the shekel seems to have weighed between 11.15 and 12.23 grams. A "royal" shekel from Gezer weighs 11.14 grams, and a series of eighth-shekel weights from Lachish have an average unit of value of 11.389 grams (0.402 oz). This is at least the approximate value of the shekel (see David Diringer, "The Early Hebrew Weights Found at Lachish," Palestine Exploration Quarterly, LXXIV 1912, 82-103; Gallling, Biblisches Reallexikon, pp. 185-88; G. A. Barrois, "La métrcole dans la Bible," Revue Biblique, XLII (1932), 50-76; Hildegard Lewy, "Assyro-Babylonian and Israelite Measures of Capacity and Rates of Seeding," Journal of the American Oriental Society, LXIV (1944), 65-73). Coinage seems to have appeared in Palestine in the latter half of the fifth century and in the following century (see E. L. Sukenik, "Parapitomena Palae-i imagine a man tormented by doubts and fears of this kind, until what was meant to bring him an assurance of God's grace served only to plunge him into a morass of doubt and uncertainty. These are just those agonies of conscience which Luther suffered and to which all are exposed who seek the ground of their acceptance with God in the punctilious discharge of a set of religious obligations. They can find peace only as they turn away from this to the undeserved mercy of God.

45:9-12; 46:16-18. Prince and People---Amid this strange world of sacrificial regulations we come upon two passages which reveal an interest
13 "This is the offering which you shall make: one sixth of an ephah from each homer of barley; one sixtieth of an ephah from each homer of barley, one tenth of a bath from each cor (the cor, like the homer, contains ten baths); one sheep from every flock of two hundred, from the families of Israel. This is the offering for ceremonial meals, burnt offerings, and peace offerings, to make atonement for them, says the Lord God. 16 All the people of the land shall give this offering to the prince in Israel. 17 And it shall be the prince's duty to provide the burnt offerings, cereal offerings, and drink offerings, at the feasts, at new moons, and all the appointed feasts of the house of Israel; he shall provide the sin offerings, cereal offerings, burnt offerings, the " fathers' offering," and "the offering of the first year." 43:18

8. Contributions to the Prince (15:13-17) 13. Ye shall offer: (1) the sixth part of an ephah of barley; (2) the tenth part of a bath of oil; (3) one sheep from every flock of two hundred. 16. All the people of the land shall give this offering to the prince in Israel. 17. It shall be the prince's duty to provide the burnt offerings, cereal offerings, and drink offerings, at the feasts, at new moons, and all the appointed feasts of the house of Israel: he shall provide the sin offerings, ceremonial offerings, burnt offerings, "the offering of the first year," and "the fathers' offering."
ings, to make reconciliation for the house of Israel.

18 Thus saith the Lord God: In the first month, in the first day of the month, thou shalt take a young bullock without blemish, and cleanse the sanctuary:
19 And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin offering, and put it upon the posts of the house, and upon the four corners of the settle of the altar, and upon the posts of the gate of the inner court.
20 And so thou shalt do the seventh day of the month for every one that erreth, and for him that is simple: so shall ye reconcile the house.
21 In the first month, in the fourteenth day of the month, ye shall have the passover, a feast of seven days; unleavened bread shall be eaten.

offerings, and peace offerings, to make atonement for the house of Israel.

18 “Thus says the Lord God: In the first month, on the first day of the month, you shall take a young bullock without blemish, and cleanse the sanctuary. 19 The priest shall take some of the blood of the sin offering and put it on the doorposts of the temple, the four corners of the ledge of the altar, and the posts of the gate of the inner court. 20 You shall do the same on the seventh day of the month for anyone who has sinned through error or ignorance; so you shall make atonement for the temple.
21 In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month, you shall celebrate the feast of the passover, and for seven days

4. Regulations for the Feasts of the First and Seventh Months (45:18-25)

The third great annual feast, the feast of first fruits or weeks, is not mentioned (see Exod. 23:14-17 [E]; 34:22-25 [J]; Deut. 16:1-16 [D]). The first and seventh months marked the halves of the religious calendar. For the P legislation of the first month see Exod. 12:1-20. As in Deut. 16:1-8, 13-15, the regulations for the Passover and feast of Booths concern the central sanctuary. Note also the sacrificial animals of the Passover here in Deut. 16:2, and contrast Exod. 12:5.

18. Cf. the bullock sin offering at the installation rites of the Aaronic priests on the first seven days of the first month in Exod. 29:35-37; cf. Exod. 40:1-15 (P). Thou shalt take: The second person singular in vs. 18-20 is direct address to the prince (cf. vs. 22). This sudden shift does not necessarily imply a later expansion, for otherwise the verses are consonant with the context, although they are regarded as secondary by Bertholet, Cook, Hölscher, Morgenstern. It does indicate how completely the editor has dropped the vision setting (cf. also 46:13-15).
20. The M.T. reads שָׁלוֹם הַכֹּל, but five MS have שָׁלֹם הַכֹּל, the more usual idiom for on the seventh day of the month; however, most scholars accept the LXX reading, “in the seventh month on the first [day] of the month,” for a purification of the sanctuary each six months seems probable. Contrast the later annual purification on the day of Atonement (Lev. 16:33; see discussion by Morgenstern, “Supplementary Studies in the Calendar of Ancient Israel,” pp. 106-7). Sinning through error or ignorance: Cf. Num. 15:22-31; Lev. 4:1-5:19.
21. The origins of the passover are obscure. It was apparently not mentioned in the earliest legislation, e.g., in Exod. 23:14-17, or, originally, in Exod. 34:18, 22-24 (cf. Exod. 34:25 with 23:18). In Deut. 16:1 it is dated on the first of the month of Abib (= first month in Ezekiel or Nisan in the later calendar). Some would read in Ezekiel “on the fifteenth day of the month” (cf. Smend, Holscher, J. M. P. Smith) after the analogy of vs. 25, the later P calendar designating the fourteenth day of the month (Exod. 12:6; Lev. 23:5; Num. 28:16; see H. G. May, “The Relation of the Passover to the Festival in those social problems with which we ourselves are so concerned. Holiness covers even such matters as standard weights and measures.

As the first of these two passages stands, it insists on strict honesty on the part of the gov-22 And upon that day shall the prince prepare for himself and for all the people of the land a bullock for a sin offering.
23 And seven days of the feast he shall prepare a burnt offering to the Lord, seven bullocks and seven rams without blemish daily the seven days; and a kid of the goats daily for a sin offering.
24 And he shall prepare a meat offering of an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and a hin of oil for an ephah.
25 In the seventh month, in the fifteenth day of the month, shall he do the like in the feast of the seven days, according to the sin offering, according to the burnt offering, and according to the meat offering, and according to the oil.

of Unleavened Cakes," Journal of Biblical Literature, LV [1936], 65-82: the literature of these festivals is too vast to be noted here, but see especially Morgenstern, "The Calendar of Ezekiel 45:18-25," Hebrew Union College Annual, XXI [1948], 493-96; etc.). The M.T. has "a feast of weeks," perhaps a scribal attempt to smuggle in the feast of Weeks, but it is better to read with many MSS and versions, a feast of seven days, i.e., SEVY: it may be that the word feast originally preceded the passover. Unleavened Bread (Mazzoth) is an agricultural festival, the Passover a pastoral one.
24. According to Josephus, six hins are one bath. Segal estimates the biblical hin as 3¼ liters, about 3½ quarts. For oil with cereal offerings see 46:14; Num. 15:6, 9; and for cereal offering with animal offerings see Num. 15:4; 28:20; note the proportions in each case.
25. The feast of Tabernacles or Booths (Succoth) is called the feast of Ingathering in Exod. 23:16; 34:22; where it is placed "at the year's end." See also Lev. 23:39-40 (P), where it is designated as the feast of Booths, and is an eight-day festival (cf. also Num. 29:12-36). Although related to P, this legislation is earlier, as shown by the fact that there is no reference to an eighth day (cf. also Deut. 16:15 [D]). Note that the day of Atonement is apparently also not known to the author, and Morgenstern is perhaps right in suggesting that the religious calendar here represents an early stage in the evolution of P. Although some scholars doubt that it is the work of Ezra and his associates, it may well belong to the century of Ezra. See also Neh. 8:14-18; Zech 14:16 for references to the feast of Booths (cf. Deut. 16:13, 16; 31:10). Morgenstern suggests that the name Succoth was not yet known to the author in Ezekiel and is a later substitution in the D legislation (see "Supplementary Studies in the Calendars of Ancient Israel," pp. 61-62; "The Chanukkah Festival and the Calendar of Ancient Israel," Hebrew Union College Annual, XXI [1948], 493-96).

the see is calling for honesty in business. In Amos 5:14 we see the kind of malpractice against which the see is here protesting.
It is one of the great merits of the O.T. that it brings moral standards to bear upon commerce and trade. We need to reflect on the extent to which our elaborate modern system of trade is in fact based on moral considerations. What would become of all the credit transactions with which we are familiar if a man's word and bond could no longer be relied upon? True, the law is available in the last resort to enforce the discharge of obligations thus undertaken, but if the law had to be called in for more than a minority of transactions, the system would break down. It is only because certain moral qualities are diffused throughout the business community that we can continue delivering goods one day, sending the bill for them a month later, and receiving payment a month after that from someone whom we have never seen.
320
Thus saith the Lord God: The gate of the inner court that looketh toward the east shall be shut on the six working days; but on the sabbath it shall be opened, and in the day of the new moon it shall be opened.

And the prince shall enter by the way of the porch of that gate without, and stand by the post of the gate: and the priests shall prepare his burnt offering and his peace offerings, and he shall worship at the threshold of the gate: then he shall go forth; but the gate shall not be shut until the evening.

Likewise the people of the land shall worship at the door of this gate before the Lord in the sabbaths and in the new moons.

Thus says the Lord God: The gate of the inner court that faces east shall be shut on the six working days; but on the sabbath day it shall be opened and on the day of the new moon it shall be opened.

The prince shall enter by the vestibule of the gate from without, and shall take his stand by the post of the gate. The priests shall offer his burnt offering and his peace offerings, and he shall worship at the threshold of the gate. Then he shall go out, but the gate shall not be shut until evening.

The people of the land shall worship at the entrance of that gate before the Lord on the sabbaths and on the new moons.

G. FURTHER REGULATIONS (46:1-24)

The larger part of the chapter continues ritual specifications (vs. 1-18), and the chapter concludes with a reversion to the theme of the prophet's tour of the temple area (vs. 19-24). Vss. 1-8 are concerned with the new moon and sabbath sacrifices of the prince, who worships at the vestibule of the east gate of the inner court. Vss. 9-10 depict the arrangement for the entrance and exit of the people and the prince. In vss. 11-15 the offerings at the feasts and the appointed festivals and the daily sacrifice are specified. Vss. 16-18 concern the matter of inheritance and gifts given by the prince. Vss. 19-20 provide a place where the priests may boil the animal offerings and bake the celiac offerings, while vs. 21-24 describe the kitchens in the outer court for the common meal sacrifices of the people.

In the opinion of some scholars the regulations in vss. 1-18 have been disarranged and are composite in authorship (see, e.g. Herrmann, Holzner, Cooke, et al.). We cannot, however, be certain that the legislative matters were ever arranged here as logically as some would presume, as, for instance, when they would place vs. 16-19 after 45:8. More probable is the ascription of vss. 19-24 to different authorship from the rest of the chapter, and to the prophet Ezekiel. The reversion to the temple tour is most abrupt. It is clearly not in its present order, since in 44:4 the prophet was left in front of the temple, but in 46:19 he is brought from the outer court through the entrance beside the north gate. Possibly vss. 19-24 belong after 42:13-14, where the north chambers of the priests are mentioned, although this is not certain.

1. THE PRINCE'S OFFERINGS ON THE NEW MOON AND SABBATH (46:1-8)

46:1-8. Like the east gate of the outer court, that of the inner court also had special significance. It was to be opened only on the sabbath and the new moon, the latter, of course, being the first day of the month. Cf. Nehemiah's orders to close the gates of Jerusalem on the sabbath (Neh. 13:19-22). The increasing emphasis on the sabbath in the postexilic period is notable. The prince, entering from the outer court into the

In the second passage (46:16-18) we see that holiness is opposed to class privilege. The assumption is that the land on which Israel will settle at the return is the Lord's. Since land is the source of all wealth under such conditions as are here envisaged, it follows that all the wealth of the nation is his. The prince is allowed the share of that wealth which he needs to enable him to maintain a dignity in accordance with his rank, but he must not encroach on what belongs to his people. If he endows his sons, it must be at his own expense, not at that of the community. Further, the interest of his family call for protection; his land may 4 And the burnt offering that the prince shall offer unto the LORD in the sabbath day shall be six lambs without blemish, and a ram without blemish.

5 And the meat offering shall be an ephah for a ram, and the meat offering for the lambs as he shall be able to give, and a hin of oil to an ephah.

6 And in the day of the new moon it shall be a young bullock without blemish, and six lambs, and a ram: they shall be without blemish.

7 And he shall prepare a meat offering, an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and for the lambs according as his hand shall attain unto, and a hin of oil to an ephah.

8 And when the prince shall enter, he shall go in by the way of the porch of that gate, and he shall go forth by the way thereof.

9 But when the people of the land shall come before the LORD in the solemn feasts, he that entereth in by the way of the north gate to worship shall go out by the way of the south gate; and he that entereth by the way of the south gate shall go forth by the way of the north gate: he shall not return by the way of the gate whereby he came in, but shall go forth over against it.

10 And the prince in the midst of them, when they go in, shall go in; and when they go forth, shall go forth.

4 The burnt offering that the prince offers to the LORD on the sabbath day shall be six lambs without blemish and a ram without blemish. 5 And the cereal offering with the ram shall be an ephah, and the cereal offering with the lambs shall be as much as he is able, together with a hin of oil to each ephah. 6 On the day of the new moon he shall offer a young bullock without blemish, and six lambs and a ram, which shall be without blemish; 7 as a cereal offering he shall provide an ephah with the bull and an ephah with the ram, and with the lambs as much as he is able, together with a hin of oil to each ephah. 8 When the prince enters, he shall go in by the vestibule of the gate, and he shall go out by the same way.

9 “When the people of the land come before the Lord at the appointed feasts, he who enters by the north gate to worship shall go out by the south gate; and he who enters by the south gate shall go out by the north gate: no one shall return by way of the gate by which he entered, but each shall go out straight ahead. 10 When they go in, the prince shall go in with them; and when they go out, he shall go out.

vestibule, passes the length of the gate to the doorpost at the exit into the inner court, but he cannot enter the inner court itself. From this vantage point he can see the great altar before the temple, on which his sacrifices would be made. See the ritual of the anointing of the doorposts of this gate in 45:19; cf. the position of the king “by the pillar” in II Kings 11:14. Note other possible allusions to sacrifice arrangements at this east gate in 30:38-43, but see also 46:19-20. The people worship in the outer court before this east gate.

In contrast with these regulations for the sacrifice offered by the prince on the sabbath (vv. 4-5), the P legislation (see Exod. 29:38-39; Num. 28:3-4, 9-10) for the sabbath sacrifices calls for two lambs, two tenthbs of an ephah of flour mixed with oil as a cereal offering, and libations, plus the regular burnt offering and its libation. So also the new moon sacrifices (vv. 6-7) differ from those in Num. 28:11-15, where two bullocks, a ram, seven lambs, along with three tenths of an ephah of fine flour mixed with oil for each bullock and two tenths of an ephah of fine flour for the ram and one tenth for each lamb are prescribed.

2. Arrangements for Entering and Leaving the Temple (46:9-10)

9-10. The appointed feasts (see 45:17-25; cf. Lev. 23:4-44) brought multitudes to Jerusalem (cf. II Chr. 30:15; Ezra 10:1), and it was necessary to bring order into the 11 And in the feast and in the solemnities the meat offering shall be an ephah to a bullock, and an ephah to a ram, and to the lambs as he is able to give, and a hin of oil to an ephah.

12 Now when the prince shall prepare a voluntary burnt offering or peace offerings voluntarily unto the Lord, one shall then open him the gate that looketh toward the east, and he shall prepare his burnt offering and his peace offerings, as he did on the sabbath day: then he shall go forth; and after his going forth one shall shut the gate.

13 Thou shalt daily prepare a burnt offering unto the Lord of a lamb of the first year without blemish: thou shalt prepare it every morning.

14 And thou shalt prepare a meat offering for it every morning, the sixth part of an ephah, and the third part of a hin of oil, to temper with the fine flour; a meat procession of the crowds. At the end of vs. 10 the Hebrew has "they shall go out" (cf. KJV), but it is better to read with many MSS and versions he shall go out (cf. also the conclusion of vs. 9).

3. REGULATIONS FOR SACRIFICE (46:11-15)

12. This verse qualifies the data in vs. 1, for here the east gate may be opened on a weekday for the prince to make a freewill offering: it is not, however, necessarily contradictory (contrast Hilscher, Bertholet, Cooke, et al.). The freewill offering (see Lev. 7:16; 22:18-25; Num. 15:5; Deut. 12:6; 16:10; 23:25; cf. Amos 4:5) is adequately described by its name; it represents gifts presented out of benevolence or on the impulse of the giver, not a sacrifice given in fulfillment of an obligation or vow. The continual burnt offering of a lamb a year old with its cereal offering (one sixth of an ephah) mixed with oil (one third of a hin), presented each morning, differs from the P legislation (Exod. 29:38-42; Num. 28:3-8), where there is both a morning and evening sacrifice of a yearling lamb, with a tenth of an ephah of fine flour and a fourth of a hin of oil, plus a libation of a fourth of a hin of wine. Cf. the burnt offering in the morning and the cereal offering in the evening in 1 Kings 16:15, and the evening burnt offerings in 1 Kings 18:29, 36; see also 1 Kings 3:20. For the continual offerings see also Ezra 3:5; Neh. 10:33; Dan. 8:11-15; 11:31; 12:11.

13-14. Thou: Read He with the versions, and in the first and last instance with some Hebrew MSS, although in 45:18-20 there is a parallel direct address to the prince with a sudden shift from the third person. Flour or fine flour: חלול, i.e., semolina, wheat without husk or bran. The ordinance for the continual burnt offering: Read ימות תושב תושב, lit., perpetual ordinances continually; some MSS have the singular "ordinance," and the correct reading is suggested in part by vs. 156.

not be alienated from it, though temporary concessions are permitted as rewards for services rendered.

The principle which is here asserted is that God's will is for social stability, for the preservation of the family generation by generation, for a contended people secure in the enjoyment of their possessions and fearing no man's violence. Where one man exercises authority he must employ it within the limits laid down by the law, for the general good, not for his own aggrandizement. A society in which men are offering continually by a perpetual ordinance unto the Lord.

15 Thus shall they prepare the lamb, and the meat offering, and the oil, every morning for a continual burnt offering.

16 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God, If the prince give a gift unto any of his sons, the inheritance thereof shall be his sons' ; it shall be their possession by inheritance.

17 But if he give a gift of his inheritance to one of his servants, then it shall be his to the year of liberty; after, it shall return to the prince: but his inheritance shall be his sons' for them.

18 Moreover the prince shall not take of the people's inheritance by oppression, to thrust them out of their possession; but he shall give his sons inheritance out of his own possession; that my people be not scattered every man from his possession.

19 ¶ After he brought me through the entry, which was at the side of the gate, into the holy chambers of the priests, which looked toward the north: and, behold, there was a place on the two sides westward.

20 Then said he unto me, This is the place where the priests shall boil the trespass offering and the sin offering, where they shall bake the meat offering; that they bear them not out into the outer court, to sanctify the people.

of oil to moisten the flour, as a cereal offering to the Lord; this is the ordinance for the continual burnt offering.

13 Thus the Lord hath provided morning by morning, for a continual burnt offering.

16 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God, If the prince makes a gift to any of his sons out of his inheritance, it shall belong to his sons, it is their property by inheritance.

17 But if he makes a gift out of his inheritance to one of his servants, it shall be his to the year of liberty; then it shall revert to the prince; only his sons may keep a gift from his inheritance. 18 The prince shall not take any of the inheritance of the people, thrusting them out of their property; he shall give his sons their inheritance out of his own property, so that none of my people shall be dispossessed of his property.

19 ¶ Then he brought me through the entrance, which was at the side of the gate, to the north row of the holy chambers for the priests; and there I saw a place at the extreme west end of them. 20 And he said to me, "This is the place where the priests shall boil the guilt offering and the sin offering, and where they shall bake the cereal offering, in order not to bring them out into the outer court and so communicate holiness to the people." 1:4:21:18:19:2

4. Gifts and Inheritance from the Prince's Property (46:16-18)

The prescription that gifts given by the prince must be from his own inheritance reflects the prophetic protest against extortion, an emphasis on the limited character of monarchy, and a desire to keep intact forever the tribal territories. Since the land really belonged to Yahweh, it could not be disposed of in perpetuity, and the people were only resident aliens or serfs under Yahweh, as is explicitly affirmed in Lev. 25:23 (P).

To keep the prince's property intact, a gift from it to a person other than a son of the prince must be returned on the year of jubilee. The year of jubilee is known only in the later legislation, see Lev. 25:8-17 (H and P), and the chronology of the editor, as well as the use of the term "year of liberty" (יֵשָׁרָה יִשָׁרָה, cf. Lev. 25:14), makes probable a reference here to the year of jubilee rather than to the sabbatical year, in connection with which there is no allusion to the release of land (contrast Bertholet; cf. Jer. 34:14).

17. The last clause is as difficult grammatically in Hebrew as in the KJV; emend "his inheritance is his sons", to וּיְשָׁרָה יִשָׁרָה, "the inheritance of his sons," with the LXX and Syriac.

19-20. The prophet visits the place where the priests boil the guilt and sin offering and bake the cereal offering at the west end of the north row of sacred chambers for the 21 Then he brought me forth into the outer court, and caused me to pass by the four corners of the court; and, behold, in every corner of the court there was a court.

22 In the four corners of the court there were courts joined of forty cubits long and thirty broad: these four corners were of one measure.

23 And there was a row of building round about in them, round about them four, and it was made with boiling places under the rows round about.

24 Then said he unto me, These are the places of them that boil, where the ministers of the house shall boil the sacrifice of the people.

47 Then he brought me back to the door of the temple; and behold, waters issued out from under the priests (see 42:1-14). According to 42:15, the priests were to eat the most sacred offerings in the priests' chambers both to the north and the south of the yard; we may perhaps presume a similar place for preparing the offerings west of the south row of chambers, as well as here west of the north row. This is not certain, however, since the north side may have had a special function (cf. Exeg. on 40:38-43). Communicate holiness to the people: See 41:19 (cf. 42:14). For the entrance, which was at the side of the gate see 42:9.

21-24. The kitchens in the corners of the outer court, in contrast with the arrangements in the preceding two verses, were for the sacrifices of the people of the land, the laity, who were served by those who minister at the temple, i.e., the Levites, if, as is probable, this accords with Ezekiel's view of the role of the Levites (cf. the picture in 1 Sam. 2:12-17).

22. Small courts: Read הָעָרַה, with the LXX, and so probably the Vulg. atrium, for the difficult הָרָעָה, “enclosed [p] courts” (cf. KJV), or possibly “secluded [or "unroofed"] courts.”

H. THE RIVER WHICH FLOWS FROM THE TEMPLE (47:1-23)

In vs. 1-12 the prophet culminates his description of the sacred area with a picture of the sacred stream which has its source beneath the threshold of the temple and flows south of the altar and the east gate down to the Dead Sea. Although fed by tributaries, the stream grows deeper as it proceeds, being unfordable four thousand cubits from the sacred area. It turns fresh the waters of the Dead Sea, and it nourishes evergreen, everblooming trees on its banks. The latter part of the chapter (vv. 15-25) introduces the allotment of the land to the twelve tribes, indicating the boundaries of the land, and specifying the place of the proselyte. If our interpretation of the structure of the book is correct, the first part of the chapter belongs to Ezekiel, while the latter part, in uprooted from the land and have no sure possession of their own, so that they are at the mercy of those who employ or govern them—such a society, our seer would say, sins against the divine holiness which should have its dwelling in the midst.

47:1-23. Return of the Divine Presence.—The seer is with his guide again, who in inspired imagination reveals to him what it will be like to live in a land renewed by the return to it of the divine presence. The symbolism of the first half of the chapter is clear; from the rebuilt temple a new and vitalizing impulse goes forth into the whole life of the community.

1-12. The Water of Life.—We have seen how the altar stands at the center of the temple as threshold of the house eastward: for the forefront of the house stood toward the east, and the waters came down from under, from the right side of the house, at the south side of the altar.

2 Then brought he me out of the way of the gate northward, and led me about the way without unto the outer gate by the way that looketh eastward; and, behold, there ran out waters on the right side.

water was issuing from below the threshold of the temple toward the east (for the temple faced east); and the water was flowing down from below the south end of the threshold of the temple, south of the altar.

2 Then he brought me out by way of the north gate, and led me round on the outside to the outer gate, that faces toward the east; and the water was coming out on the south side.

*Heb obscure which the vision motif is absent, belongs to the editor. A number of scholars believe that 13:12 concludes Ezekiel’s picture of the temple (see Cooke, Steuernagel, Herrmann).

1. THE SACRED RIVER (47:1-12)

The new age is a new creation and properly has its paradise, with its sacred river and trees. Like the paradise in Genesis, the picture here is ultimately based on the motif of the sanctuary with its sacred trees and stream. As paradise is the source of the rivers which water the earth, so here Jerusalem, the abode of the glory of Yahweh, is the mount of God (cf. 29:12-19). So also the hill of the gods, Mount Saphon, in the recesses of the north (cf. Ps. 48:2), was at the mbk hrm, “the sources of the rivers” (cf. Gordon, Ugaritic Handbook, text 49, 1, 5; 51, IV, l. 21; etc.). See Zech. 14:8, where the sacred stream from Jerusalem divides and flows both toward the Mediterranean and toward the Dead Sea (cf. also Zech. 13:1), and Joel 3:18, where the stream from the temple waters the valley of Shittim. In Rev. 22 the river of life issues from the throne of God and of the Lamb. See also Enoch 26:2-3 and Ps. 46:4. The sacred rock at the sanctuary at Jerusalem is said in Arabic tradition to be from paradise, and it is affirmed that all sweet waters issue from the rock, there to divide and flow to all parts of the world (see Ibn al-Firka in “The Book of Arousing Souls,” and Abu ‘l-Fida in “The Book of Inciting Desire,” translated in C. D. Matthews, Palestine, Mohammedan Holy Land [New Haven: Yale University Press, 1949], pp. 29, 65, 118). It is dubious that the Pool of Siloam, the Spring Gilon, or the Waters of Shiloah (cf. Isa. 8:6) are a prominent element in the symbolism here, if at all, although it may be in part suggested by the Kidron Valley, “the Brook Kidron” (ין הו מים), which is east of Jerusalem and reaches the Dead Sea below En-gaim. Note that here also it is called ים, a “wadi” (vs. 5 f.). However, the geography is more mythological than terrestrial. The stream is doubtless thought to receive its waters from the tāmūn, “the deep” (cf. 17:8; 19:10; 31:4; and Gordon, loc. cit.). Note also the “sea of brass” before the temple (1 Kings 7:23, etc.) and the Mesopotamian representations of the deity with flowing streams (see May, “The Sacred Tree on Palestine Painted Pottery,” pp. 258-54).

47:1. It is not clear from whence the prophet is brought back, since the order of the preceding text is uncertain. From the . . . side: ינן, but read with some Hebrew MSS, ינן, threshold, as easier in the verse, a plausible scribal error; perhaps also read ינן, “southward,” for ינן, south, and so translate: “from under [see KJV] the threshold of the temple southward” (cf. Targ.). This presents a clearer picture, for the waters issuing from the threshold could hardly have flowed south of the temple, although the RSV interpretation south end of the threshold is not impossible.

2. See Exeg. on 44:1-3. By the way that looketh eastward is hardly correct, for it is the gate that faces eastward; the text is probably corrupt, and ינן, way, may have been transposed from its original position after ינן, faces (see RSV). Coming out: The Hebrew is a denominative verb from a noun meaning “flesh,” and so may mean “to come out” as from a flask, intending to suggest that the stream is a small one; some would translate “trickle.”
3 And when the man that had the line in his hand went forth eastward, he measured a thousand cubits, and he brought me through the waters; the waters were to the ankles.

4 Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through the waters; the waters were to the knees. Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through; the waters were to the loins.

5 Afterward he measured a thousand; and it was a river that I could not pass over: for the waters were risen, waters to swim in, a river that could not be passed over.

6 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, hast thou seen this? Then he brought me, and caused me to return to the brink of the river.

7 Now when I had returned, behold, at the bank of the river were very many trees on the one side and on the other.

8 Then said he unto me, These waters issue out toward the east country, and go down into the desert, and go into the sea: which being brought forth into the sea, the waters shall be healed.

9 And it shall come to pass, that every thing that liveth, which moveth, whithersoever the rivers shall come, shall live: and there shall be a very great multitude of fish, because these waters shall be brought forth: they shall be healed; and every thing shall live whither the river cometh.

4 In vs. 4b through the water is read with twelve Hebrew MSS, the Syriac, Targ., and Vulg. (cf. KJV).

6. Along is read with some Hebrew MSS.

8. The Arabah is the depression in which lie the Jordan and the Dead Sea; the term also may include the continuance of the depression south of the Dead Sea, modern Wadi el-'Arabah. The Dead Sea was called the Sea of the Arabah. Stagnant waters of the sea: Read with the LXX and Syriac, מים, waters, for מים, "to the sea," repeated by dittography and confusion; read with the Syriac שפך מים, lit., "stinking," or else שפך מים, "sour," for שפך מים, brought forth, although neither is too happy a description of the Dead Sea. Become fresh: Lit., shall be healed.

9. The meaning of this verse is fairly clear, although the text is corrupt and repetitious. The diction recalls that in Gen. 1, perhaps in an earlier form, and suggests something of the new creation ideology that is involved. Rivers: In Hebrew, two rivers, 10 And it shall come to pass, that the fishers shall stand upon it from Engedi even unto En-gai'am; they shall be a place to spread forth nets; their fish shall be according to their kinds, as the fish of the great sea, exceeding many.

11 But the mire places thereof and the marshes thereof shall not be healed; they shall be given to salt.

12 And by the river upon the bank thereof, on this side and on that side, shall grow all trees for meat, whose leaf shall not fade, neither shall the fruit thereof be consumed; it shall bring forth new fruit according to his months, because their waters they issued out of the sanctuary: and the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine.

but with the versions read river; the corruption may be due to the influence of Zech. 14:8. The insertion of the waters of the sea is necessary for the sense. The last clause, so everything will live where the river goes, should perhaps be omitted with the Syriac.

10. Engedi is modern Tell ej-Jurun near 'Ain Jid on the west shore of the Dead Sea, the name means 'the spring of the goat.' En-gai'am ("the spring of the call") is perhaps at modern 'Ain Feishka, about two miles south of the Khirbet Qumran area where an Essene community center has been excavated and significant manuscript finds have been made (see Millar Burrows, The Dead Sea Scrolls of St. Mark's Monastery [New Haven: American Schools of Oriental Research, 1950], Vol. I; J. C. Trever, "The Discovery of the Scrolls," Biblical Archaeologist, XI [1948], 46-57; R. P. R. de Vaux, "La grotte des manuscrits hébreux," Revue Biblique, LVI [1949], 586-609; "Fouille au Khirbet Qumrân," Ibid., LX [1953], 83-106; Rowley, The Zadokite Fragments and the Dead Sea Scrolls). A place for the spreading of nets: See 26:5, 14.

11. Note the modern exploitation of the Dead Sea for its mineral salts (see the description of the Dead Sea, called usually in the O.T. the Salt Sea, in G. A. Smith, Historical Geography of the Holy Land, pp. 499-516).

12. Cf. the figure in Ps. 1:3. The center and source of health and prosperity for the community is the sanctuary.

Is there an altar in our nation, our home, our personal life, which is thus a center of renewal? Experience, however, suggests that an initial impulse is not enough. There is often difficulty in maintaining it. How many revivals of religion have been like a stream which runs ever more shallow as it goes on its way, to lose itself in some barren waste in the end? The economist has his law of decreasing returns and there seems to be a similar tendency in the spiritual life. Only too often the creative impulse dies down, inspiration is replaced by routine, and instead of the breath of God's creative spirit we have an organization which struggles to keep going. The seer trusts that such will not be the case with Israel, that with the passage of time the stream of spiritual life will flow deeper and broader, the work of God once begun will go on from triumph to triumph. What is happening in our own case? Is the stream deepening or growing shallower as time advances?

But the supreme achievement of this renewed spiritual life has yet to be mentioned. It will be able to redeem the waste places of the nation's history. The Salt Sea will teem with fish again; i.e., nothing is beyond the reach of God's grace as it will come to Israel in the new day. Where God is at work there is no hopeless situation, no group of people who are beyond redemption, no heritage from an unhappy past which need condemn us to a future delivered over to despair. Again we have the message of the gospel as we had it in ch. 37. It is the glory of God that he can achieve the impossible, giving life to the dead.
2. Boundaries of the Land (47:13-20)

This section was foreshadowed earlier in ch. 46, and is anticipated particularly by the editor in 37:15-26, especially vs. 26-28. The land is to be divided equally among the twelve tribes, with Ephraim and Manasseh given two portions, since they really represent two tribes. Only the territory in western Palestine is involved; the Trans-Jordan tribes being given territory in western Palestine. The northern limits apparently reach the borders presumed at the time of David, extending to the entrance to Hamath (see II Sam. 8:5-12), and at the time of Jeroboam II (II Kings 14:25; Amos 6:14). The boundary in general is that described in Num. 34:1-12; the report here in Ezekiel is perhaps based on the same tradition or source from which P drew in Numbers. Quite uncertain of location are Hazer-hatticon and Sibraim (=Sepharvaim). Hethlon has been identified with Heitela, to the east of Tripoli (see F. M. Abel, Géographie de la Palestine [Paris: J. Gabala, 1933], I, 302). Hamath is modern Ham, and “the entrance to Hamath” was probably in the territory of Riblah and Kadesh on the Orontes River (see G. E. Wright and F. V. Filson, eds., The Westminster Historical Atlas to the Bible [Philadelphia: Westminster Press, 1945]), p. 47), to judge from the most probable location of Zedad (at Salam) and Hazar-enon (=Hazar-enan, at Qaryattein), and the possible association of Hethlon with Heitela. The northern boundary, however, has been placed by some scholars much to the south of this, with Hethlon at ‘Adlon and the entrance of Hamath in the valley between Mount Hermon and Mount Lebanon or in the north end of 13-23. Concentration.—The artificial location of the tribes in the new era is again to be understood as symbolism. Israel is to learn to accept her limitations and withdraw within them, that she may concentrate there on that service of God to which she is called.

Henceforth there is to be no exposed frontier and no unnecessary contact with the heathen world. Israel will abandon the country across the Jordan and concentrate within the area between that river and the Mediterranean Sea. The policy is definitely one of withdrawal upon interior lines, and carries with it the definitive abandonment of the hopes which no doubt were still cherished in certain circles, i.e., the hope that the frontiers of the nation would one day be restored to those of David and Solomon. The dedicated community must renounce all dreams of this kind. Imperial greatness is not for it, and it should not be anxious even for the satisfaction of its legitimate claims to territory.

Within these frontiers the nation puts itself into the hands of God without reserve, that he may give it what shape he will. The fact that the country is cut up into a number of rectangles, without regard for historical frontiers, reminds one of Solomon’s organization of twelve districts as administrative areas (I Kings 4:7-20). That was the act of a despot indifferent to local loyalties, if he did not in fact aim at their suppression in the interests of his centralized efficiency. Here the meaning of the arrangement is quite different. The new Israel will be content to be dealt with as God may see best; it will not demand that he respect earlier boundaries or preserve tribal dignities. Let him be free to make of the name what he will.

There is a lesson for us all in this. In our discussions of Christian unity it is not everything often vitiated from the outset by the fact that we are determined to preserve our distinctive traditions and our old associations? Is there any hope of union until we, as it were, put the map of the church before God and let him redraw it as he will, whether he respects existing rights or overrules them? Our see no doubt found it easy to make such a surrender because the calamity of the Exile had deprived the old frontiers of their significance and made a fresh start possible. Must we wait for such constraint of circumstances?

If the new Israel is to be concentrated, it is not for all that to be exclusive. The stranger may take up his residence and even be admitted to citizenship and ownership of land, finding his place within one of the tribes. This leads us to our next topic.

13:23. The Two Strategies.—If we set chs. 40-48 beside Isa. 40-55, we can say that, while 14 And ye shall inherit it, one as well as another: concerning the which I lifted up mine hand to give it unto your fathers: and this land shall fall unto you for inheritance.

15 And this shall be the border of the land toward the north side, from the great sea, the way of Hethlon, as men go to Zedad;

16 Hamath, Berithah, Sibraim, which is between the border of Damascus and the border of Hamath: Hazer-hatticon, which is by the coast of Hauran.

17 And the border from the sea shall be Hazar-enan, the border of Damascus, and the north northward, and the border of Hamath. And this is the north side.

18 Golan, and Hazar-enon near the sources of the Jordan or in northern Trans-Jordan or in the territory west of el-Leja, in the neighborhood of es-Sanamen, Sheikh Miskin, or el-Harra (for discussion, see Abel, op. cit., I, 302-4; Martin Noth, “Studien zu den historisch-geographischen Dokumenten des Jostabuches,” Zeitschrift des deutschen Palästina-vereins, LVIII (1935), 290-48). Berithah is modern Bereitan, and Hazar-zavart perhaps ‘Ain el-’Arz, south of the Dead Sea. Meribath-kadesh (= Kadesh-barnea) is perhaps at ‘Ain Qedeis, while the Brook of Egypt is Wadi el-’Arish. The Great Sea is the Mediterranean. From north to south, accepting the more northerly boundary, the distance measures some 280 miles. The kingdom of David and Solomon extended farther south to the Gulf of Aqabah or the Red Sea.

19 For this the Hebrew has מִ, an error for מִ, which correctly appears in some MSS, the LXX, Vulg., and Targ. By haplography the Hebrew has "[m] border" rather than the border. The final clause, יִשְׂרָאֵל תָּן רֹאשׁ, lit., "Joseph portions," should be read with the Targ. and Vulg., יִשְׂרָאֵל תָּן רֹאשׁ יִשְׂרָאֵל, "to Joseph two portions"; "to" has been omitted by haplography.

14. I swore, i.e., with uplifted hand (see Exeg. on 20:5; etc.).

15-16. The Hebrew has "to the entrance of Zedad, Hamath, Berithah," etc., but it is better to transpose Hamath and read, with the LXX, to the entrance of Hamath, . . . to Zedad, Berithah. Num. 34:7 has Mount Hor for Hethlon. Hazar-hatticon is emended by some to Hazar-enon with the LXX, but the latter is too far north to be on the border of Hauran. (Or is the Hauran reference an error? Contrast Noth, loc. cit.) Hauran is the plateau south of the Pharpar River, roughly equivalent to Bashan. Berithah is the Berothai of II Sam. 8:8. For Sibraim=Sepharaim see II Kings 17:24; 18:34.

17. The confusion in this verse is illustrated by the unintelligible KJV. Haplography has resulted in "and a border from the sea shall be," but it is better read with eleven MSS and the border from the sea shall be. Which is on the northern border of Damascus . . . : Lit., "the border of Damascus and north to the north, and the border of Hamath and [הַן] the northern side" [sic]; for הנֹה, "and north," read הנֹה, "northward." The

for the first the remnant is saved, for the other its mission is to save. Each of the prophets sees his people reduced to a mere fraction of what they had once been, and gladly bids them surrender political power that they may devote themselves to their spiritual mission. But while

Ezekiel desires above all to preserve his people from contamination by the heathen world. Second Isaiah would have them venture all on a mission to the heathen. Probably, as thus worded, the antithesis is too sharp, but it does set before us the two strategies between which the church still has to choose. Of course there is a place for each. There are times which call 18 And the east side ye shall measure from Hauran, and from Damascus, and from Gilead, and from the land of Israel by Jordan, from the border unto the east sea. And this is the east side.

19 And the south side southward, from Tamar even to the waters of strife in Kadesh, the river to the great sea. And this is the south side southward.

20 The west side also shall be the great sea from the border, till a man come over against Hamath. This is the west side.

21 So shall ye divide this land unto you according to the tribes of Israel.

22 ¶ And it shall come to pass, that ye shall divide it by lot for an inheritance unto you, and to the strangers that sojourn among you, which shall beget children among you: and they shall be unto you as born in the country among the children of Israel; they shall have inheritance with you among the tribes of Israel.

23 And it shall come to pass, that in what tribe the stranger sojourneth, there shall ye

LXX omits the reference to Hamath; the territory of Hamath adjoined the northern boundary (cf. 18:1). Damascus was thus within the territory claimed for Israel here. Instead of הָאָרֶץ, read הָאָרֶץ, this shall be, with a number of MSS and the Syriac.

18. The starting point was probably originally given, and may be inserted as הָאָרֶץ. The line of the eastern boundary ran between Hauran and Damascus; the verse should not be emended with some to read that it was Hazer-enon which lay between Hauran and Damascus (see vs. 17). The eastern sea is the Dead Sea. As far as Tamar: Read with the Syriac יָהֲנָה, ye shall measure. This shall be: Read הָאָרֶץ for הָאָרֶץ, as in vs. 17b.

19. See Num. 34:3-5. Meribath-kadesh: See Num. 27:14 (cf. “waters of Meribah,” Num. 20:13; Deut. 33:8; Ps. 81:7; 106:32; etc.). For the south border see also Ezek. 48:28.

3. PLACE OF THE PROSLEYTE IN RESTORED ISRAEL. (47:21-23)

21-23. The proselyte is to be equal to the native born, as also in the H and P sources (see Lev. 16:29; 17:15; 19:34; 24:16; 22; Num. 15:29; 50; etc.). The ge’rolm are most probably proselytes here and in the later sources, and the LXX so interprets them here (see Mas. “Theological Universalism in the O.T.”, p. 104), Mek. “The Translation of גֵּר in the Hexateuch,” pp. 72-80). Some suggest that these verses are a later addition (see, however, Exeg. on 14:7; 22:7).

for concentration, defense, and withdrawal upon interior lines. But this can never be accepted as a permanent state of things; it is preparatory to a fresh advance at the earliest opportunity. The Christian morality is an adventure of redemption, not a counsel of safety.

Returning for a moment to vs. 22-23, we observe that while the new Israel of this vision is not exclusive, it is not missionary. It is hospitable to those from outside who come to throw in their lot with it, but it does not go forth to win them. In a passage which has often been quoted, a Jewish scholar points out that it is precisely here that the gospel of Jesus give him his inheritance, saith the Lord God.

48 These are the names of the tribes. From the north end to the coast of the way of Hebron, as one goeth to Hamath, Hazar-enan, the border of Damascus northward, to the coast of Hamath: for these are his sides east and west; a portion for Dan.

2 And by the border of Dan, from the east side unto the west side, a portion for Asher.

3 And by the border of Asher, from the east side even unto the west side, a portion for Naphtali.

4 And by the border of Naphtali, from the east side unto the west side, a portion for Manasseh.

shall assign him his inheritance, says the Lord God.

48 "These are the names of the tribes: Beginning at the northern border, from the sea by way of Hebron to the entrance of Hamath, as far as Hazar-enan (which is on the northern border of Damascus over against Hamath), and from the east side to the west, one portion. 2 Adjoining the territory of Dan, from the east side to the west, Asher, one portion. 3 Adjoining the territory of Asher, from the east side to the west, Naphtali, one portion. 4 Adjoining the territory of Naphtali, from the east side to the west,

J. Alloymet of the Tribes Territories (48:1-35)

This final chapter of the book presents a blueprint of the allotment of the land. The tribes are arranged north and south of the area which includes the square of 25,000 cubits and the property of the prince on each side of the square, extending to the Jordan and the Mediterranean. Vss. 1-7 give the location of the seven tribes north of this area, vs. 8-22 describe the area itself, and vs. 23-29 locate the five tribes south of the area. Vss. 30-35 describe the twelve gates of the city, which are named after the twelve tribes, and give the overall measurements of the city.

The tribes are apparently given territories of equal width, all lines running east and west with an exactness that ignores natural geographical features. From north to south, north of the sacred portion, the order of the tribes is Dan, Asher, Naphtali, Manasseh, Ephraim, Reuben, and Judah; the southern tribes are Benjamin, Simeon, Issachar, Zebulun, and Gad. Levi, of course, has no inheritance. The Trans-Jordan tribes are placed in western Palestine, and there is discernible only a rough resemblance to the original position of the tribes. Judah and Benjamin are given places of importance on either side of the sacred portion and city property. It is perhaps significant that the sons of Rachel and Leah are placed closest to the sacred portion, four on each side: Manasseh and Ephraim (i.e., Joseph [Rachel]), Reuben (Leah), and Judah (Leah) to the north, and Benjamin (Rachel), Simeon (Leah), Issachar (Leah), and Zebulun (Leah) to the south. The first and second sons of Leah are placed north and south respectively of Judah and Benjamin (see Gen. 29:32-33). The concubine tribes are placed farthest away from the sacred area, i.e., Dan (Bilhah), Asher (Zilpah), and Naphtali (Zilpah) on the north, and Gad (Zilpah) on the south, none closer than fifth place to the sacred portion. Some scholars consider vs. 9-22 a later addition and a duplication of the materials in 45:1-8 (but see Exeg. on 45:1-9).

1. Tribes North of the Sacred Portion and City Property (48:1-7)

Reuben was originally a Trans-Jordan tribe, and the Trans-Jordan half tribe of Manasseh is ignored. Dan (after its migration), Asher, and Naphtali were the three most northerly tribes, but they were separated from Manasseh and Ephraim by Zebulun and Issachar, while Benjamin came in between Ephraim and Judah. The restoration of Israel as well as Judah is a characteristic concept of the editor.

48.1. The state of the verse is suggested by the unintelligible rendering of the KJV. The grammatical and syntactical relationship of the various parts of the verse is not clear. From the sea: Read with 47:15, דַּעַמְיו for דָּעַמָּה, "to the side of" (= to the coast of),

332
5 And by the border of Manasseh, from the east side unto the west side, a portion for Ephraim.
6 And by the border of Ephraim, from the east side even unto the west side, a portion for Reuben.
7 And by the border of Reuben, from the east side unto the west side, a portion for Judah.
8 ¶ And by the border of Judah, from the east side unto the west side, shall be the offering which ye shall offer of five and twenty thousand reeds in breadth, and in length as one of the other parts, from the east side unto the west side: and the sanctuary shall be in the midst of it.
9 The obligation that ye shall offer unto the Lord shall be of five and twenty thousand in length, and of ten thousand in breadth.
10 And for them, even for the priests, shall be this holy oblation: toward the north five and twenty thousand in length, and toward the west ten thousand in breadth, and toward the east ten thousand in breadth, and toward the south five and twenty thousand in length: and the sanctuary shall be in the midst of it.

which is probably a corruption by ditography from later in the verse (Cornill, Bertholet).

As far as Hazar-enon: See 47:17. From the east side to the west: Read יָם אֲרֵם רְעָע (Heb יָם רְעָע) after the analogy of vs. 3 ff. (cf. LXX) for יָם רְעָע הַמֶּרֶד, the east side the west. This is preceded by the corrupted text, and they shall be his (RSV mg.): perhaps intended to read "and he [i.e., Dan] shall have," reading with the LXX יָם רְעָע הַמֶּרֶד, the phrase may be a gloss.

2. SPECIAL TERRITORY FOR PRIESTS, LEVITES, CITY, AND PRINCE (48:8-22)

With this section cf. 45:1-8.

8. The portion includes the territory of the priests, the territory of the Levites, and the property of the city, altogether making a square of 25,000 cubits; it includes also the prince’s territory which lies east and west of this square (see Exeg. on 45:1-9). Reeds is obviously wrong; read cubits; the Hebrew gives only the numbers.

9. The length is measured from east to west, and the breadth from north to south; the breadth here must be revised from ten thousand to twenty-five thousand, to accord with vs. 8, or better, if the term “sacred portion” here is used to include only the priests’ and Levites’ territory (see vs. 14, 18, 21-22), read “twenty thousand” with the LXX of 45:1 (see also 48:15).

surpasses the best that contemporary Judaism could attain. The rabbis, to be sure, were ready to welcome the sinner when he repented; they did not consider it their duty, as Jesus did, to seek out the sinner and win him to a better mind.

48:8-15. Sacred and Profane.—Notice the contrast between the territory connected with the temple, which as such is sacred and inalienable, and the site of the city, which is profane or secular. This raises at once the question of the distinction between these two spheres of life. That the distinction is a real one we cannot doubt. Direct concentration upon God is one tuary of the Lord shall be in the midst thereof.
11. It shall be for the priests that are sanctified of the sons of Zadok; which have kept my charge, which went not astray when the children of Israel went astray, as the Levites went astray.
12. And this oblation of the land that is offered shall be unto them a thing most holy by the border of the Levites.
13. And over against the border of the priests, the Levites shall have five and twenty thousand in length, and ten thousand in breadth: all the length shall be five and twenty thousand, and the breadth ten thousand.
14. And they shall not sell of it, neither exchange, nor alienate the firstfruits of the land: for it is holy unto the Lord.
15. ¶ And the five thousand, that are left in the breadth over against the five and twenty thousand, shall be a profane place for the city, for dwelling, and for suburbs: and the city shall be in the midst thereof.
16. And these shall be the measures thereof: the north side four thousand and five hundred, and the south side four thousand five hundred in length by breadth.

---

11. Sanctified: The Hebrew has the singular adjective, but the נ (nun) of the plural ending is wrongly attached to the following word; read the plural with the LXX, Syriac, and Targ. See 44:10 for the status of the Levites.
13. The Hebrew has תְּנֵא, "and the Levites," but read with the LXX and Vulg., נְנֵא, and the Levites shall have. Ten thousand (second occurrence): The context demands twenty thousand with the LXX (cf. vs. 9).
14. Exchange and alienate should probably be plural impersonal rather than singular; i.e., read with the Vulg. and Syriac, וַיְנַעְנוּ, and with the Syriac וַיַּעֲנִינוּ for וַיַּעֲנֶנֽוּ. Sell is plural.
15. Ordinary use: מַלְאָכָה, lit. profane, as opposed to קָדָם, "sacred" (see 22:26; 42:26; 44:23), and here profane in distinction from the "sacred portion" of 25,000 by 20,000 cubits. Open country: The open space on all sides of the city, 250 cubits deep (cf. vs. 17); cf. the open space about the temple in 45:2; the term (וֹאִית) is used in P to refer to the common land around the Levitical cities (Num. 35:27; Josh. 14:4; etc.; see Exeg. on Ezek. 27:28).
16. The dimensions of the city, including the open country around it, are just ten times the size of the sanctuary, and so about 1.6 miles on each side, or about 6.5 miles in circumference (see 42:20). The Hebrew text repeats the second five by ditography.
sand and five hundred, and on the east side four thousand and five hundred, and the west side four thousand and five hundred.

17 And the suburbs of the city shall be toward the north two hundred and fifty, and toward the south two hundred and fifty, and toward the east two hundred and fifty, and toward the west two hundred and fifty.

18 And the residue in length over against the oblation of the holy portion shall be ten thousand eastward, and ten thousand westward: and it shall be over against the oblation of the holy portion: and the increase thereof shall be for food unto them that serve the city.

19 And they that serve the city shall serve it out of all the tribes of Israel.

20 All the oblation shall be five and twenty thousand by five and twenty thousand: ye shall offer the holy oblation foursquare, with the possession of the city.

21 ¶ And the residue shall be for the prince, on the one side and on the other of the holy oblation, and of the possession of the city, over against the five and twenty thousand of the oblation toward the east border, and westward over against the five and twenty thousand toward the west border, over against the portions for the south side four thousand five hundred, the east side four thousand five hundred, and the west side four thousand five hundred.

18-19. The territory ten thousand cubits to the east, and ten thousand to the west of the city and its open land will serve to supply the city with food: it will be tilled by the workers of the city drawn from all the tribes of Israel. Perhaps the result of diacritography or a marginal note, the Hebrew adds rather unnecessarily, "and it shall be alongside the sacred portion."

20. The KJV has a very obscure translation. The Hebrew reads "a fourth," but the sense demands "square" (cf. 45:16) or "cubits" (cf. 40:47, 45:2), square (cf. LXX).

21-22. The portions for the prince (vs. 21) makes little sense (cf. RSV): the portions referred to are the tribal portions, i.e., those of Judah and Benjamin (see vs. 225). Perhaps we should transpose הָסַר, "it shall be," from vs. 22a and read, "it shall be for [i.e., "belong to"; cf. ASV] the prince." The last part of vs. 21 should go with vs. 22. The... prince: and it shall be the holy oblation; and the sanctuary of the house shall be in the midst thereof.

22 Moreover, from the possession of the Levites, and from the possession of the city, being in the midst of that which is the prince’s, between the border of Judah and the border of Benjamin, shall be for the prince.

23 As for the rest of the tribes, from the east side unto the west side, Benjamin shall have a portion.

24 And by the border of Benjamin, from the east side unto the west side, Simeon shall have a portion.

25 And by the border of Simeon, from the east side unto the west side, Issachar a portion.

26 And by the border of Issachar, from the east side unto the west side, Zebulun a portion.

27 And by the border of Zebulun, from the east side unto the west side, Gad a portion.

28 And by the border of Gad, at the south side southward, the border shall be even from Tamar unto the waters of strife, in Kadesh, and to the river toward the great sea.

29 This is the land which ye shall divide by lot unto the tribes of Israel for inheritance, and these are their portions, saith the Lord God.

30 ¶ And these are the goings out of the west border, parallel to the tribal portions, it shall belong to the prince. The holy portion with the sanctuary of the temple in its midst, and the property of the city, shall be in the midst of that which belongs to the prince. The portion of the prince shall lie between the territory of Judah and the territory of Benjamin.

31 As for the rest of the tribes: from the east side to the west, Benjamin, one portion. And adjoining the territory of Benjamin, from the east side to the west, Simeon, one portion. And adjoining the territory of Simeon, from the east side to the west, Issachar, one portion. And adjoining the territory of Issachar, from the east side to the west, Zebulun, one portion. And adjoining the territory of Zebulun, from the east side to the west, Gad, one portion. And adjoining the territory of Gad to the south, the boundary shall run from Tamar to the waters of Meribah-ka’desh, thence along the Brook of Egypt to the Great Sea. This is the land which ye shall allot as an inheritance among the tribes of Israel, and these are their several portions, says the Lord God.

30 ¶ These shall be the goings out of the city:

*See: Heb and from the property of the Levites and from the city of the city.

3. Tribes South of the Sacred Portion and City Property (48:23-29)

Gad was a Trans-Jordan tribe. Issachar and Zebulun were in northern Palestine.

26. Along the Brook of Egypt: The Hebrew has “along [to] the brook,” but the Brook of Egypt is obviously intended (cf. 47:19).

4. The City of Jerusalem (48:30-35)

The measurements of the city were given earlier in vs. 16, but for one who knows the habits of the editor, this is no sign that we have here a different source. There are center of a genuine and all-inclusive community, the expression of a common purpose. No tribe can claim it as its own; it belongs to all, and all go forth from it to work the common land. What better hope could we have for our own society than something of this kind?

30-35. The City of God—Jerusalem is rebuilt as the city of God, ancient animosities forgotten.
EZEKIEL

31 And the gates of the city shall be after the names of the tribes of Israel: three gates northward; one gate of Reuben, one gate of Judah, one gate of Levi.

32 And at the east side four thousand and five hundred: and three gates; and one gate of Joseph, one gate of Benjamin, one gate of Dan.

33 And at the south side four thousand and five hundred measures: and three gates; one gate of Simeon, one gate of Issachar, one gate of Zebulun.

34 And the north side, which is to be four thousand five hundred cubits by measure, three gates, the gate of Reuben, the gate of Judah, and the gate of Levi, the gates of the city being named after the tribes of Israel. 35 On the east side, which is to be four thousand five hundred cubits by measure, three gates, the gate of Joseph, the gate of Benjamin, and the gate of Dan. 36 On the south side, which is to be four thousand five hundred cubits by measure, three gates, the gate of Simeon, the gate of Issachar, and the gate of Zebulun.

On the north side are named after the two tribes to the north, Judah and Reuben, and after Levi. All three are sons of Leah (see Gen. 29:32-34). The north gate of the city in the pre-exilic and postexilic period was called the Gate of Benjamin (see Jer. 57:13; 56:7; Zech. 14:10; cf. the upper Benjamin Gate of the house of the Lord, Jer. 20:2; cf. the modern Damascus Gate in the north wall of Jerusalem). On the south are the gates of Simeon, Issachar, and Zebulun, the three tribes located in the order south of the sacred portion, although Benjamin intervened between them and the sacred allotment; all three, like those represented by the northern gate, are sons of Leah (Gen. 29:33; 30:18-20). The gates on the east are Joseph, Benjamin, and Dan, the first two sons of Rachel and the last the son of Rachel's slave-maid Bilhah (Gen. 30:23-24; 36:16-18; 30:6). The gates on the west are named after Gad, Asher (sons of Zilpah) and Naphtali (son of Bilhah), all "concubine" tribes (Gen. 30:7-15). One gate is named after Joseph, although Joseph had been given two tribal portions; this is done to make room for Levi among the twelve, and it does not imply variant authorship. We may compare the twelve gates of the new Jerusalem, named after the twelve tribes and complemented by twelve foundation stones of the city wall named after the twelve disciples, in Rev. 21:12-14.

Probably κατά μετρίαν, "by measure," is omitted after cubits and it may be inserted with the LXX and Syriac; cf. vs. 36, 33, although most scholars unnecessarily emend these verses to get exact repetition of the formulas.

equal recognition being given to all the tribes. Each has a gate named after it. The symmetry of the plan symbolizes the harmony of purpose in which the inhabitants live. But the secret of this harmony lies in the fact that the Lord is there, the divine presence orders and unifies all that goes on within its walls. The sea means by these words that the Lord has come back; he who was driven out by the people's sin, forced to abandon his temple because of the abominations perpetrated in it and his city because of its social injustices, has now returned. He has done so at once because he is gracious and so restores his people to their own land; and because they are penitent and having learned the lesson only the suffering of exile could teach, now offer to him a dedicated common life. So a divided nation with a tragic history is renewed and drawn together again, with God at its very center.

Note some of the differences between the new Jerusalem of our verse and that of Rev. 21-22. (a) There it is made more clear than here that the new Jerusalem is God's gift to men. (b) In Rev. 21 there is no temple, while here the temple is central. (c) There the new Jerusalem is open to receive the nations of mankind, whereas here is nothing more than the admission to civic rights of the alien settled in the land.

On this whole theme see the argument of Bergson* on the distinction between the "closed" and the "open" society, the latter being that city of God whose gates are open to all and whose law is love.

But the significance of these final words of Ezekiel can only be fully understood as we bear in mind what the word "God" has meant.

* Two Sources of Morality and Religion, passim.
34. The . . . gates, שערי, should be emended with one MS, the LXX, and Syriac to שערים, gates.

35. The new name indicates the new status of the city. For the new name given to Jerusalem in the new age see the contemporary biographer of Jeremiah in Jer. 3:17 (cf. also Zech. 8:3; Isa. 1:26; 60:14; 62:2; see May, "Jeremiah's Biographer," p. 198; cf. the ideology in II Kings 23:27). The name of the city is Yahweh-shammah, The Lord is there.

throughout the book. This is no easy divine presence which makes itself at home among men. Where the God who is "a consuming fire" (Heb. 12:29) comes to dwell, what is paltry and superficial can no longer be tolerated. Where the absolute divine holiness enters in, "who may abide the day of his coming?" (Mal. 3:2). The final mercy of God is not anything that can be taken for granted. Our response to it will be in reverence as well as in gratitude.